

1-1-1994

About the Authors

CSR Editors

Follow this and additional works at: <http://digitalcommons.wayne.edu/csr>

Recommended Citation

Editors, CSR (1994) "About the Authors," Clinical Sociology Review: Vol. 12: Iss. 1, Article 3.

Available at: <http://digitalcommons.wayne.edu/csr/vol12/iss1/3>

This About the Authors is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@WayneState. It has been accepted for inclusion in Clinical Sociology Review by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@WayneState.

About the Authors

In addition to teaching and administrative work, Janet Mancini Billson has a private practice in group facilitation training and focus group research. Editor of Volume II of The Clinical Sociology Review, she was certified as a clinical sociologist in 1984. Billson's publications include Cool Pose: Dilemmas of Black Manhood in America (with Richard Majors, 1992, 1993); Strategic Styles: Coping in the Inner City (1981); and numerous articles on identity and marginality. She is currently writing a book about Canadian women, The Tapestry of Women's Lives: Culture and Power in a Changing World, and recently completed Inuit Women: A Century of Change.

Nita Bryant has an MA in sociology from Virginia Commonwealth University and is completing a Ph.D. in Sociology at the University of Virginia. Her research interests are in race and ethnic relations. Among other honors she was a recipient of a Social Science Research Council award to study aspects of the urban underclass.

William Cloud is an assistant professor in the Graduate School of Social Work at the University of Denver. Much of his social work practice has been in the area of drug and alcohol treatment. He is currently director of the Faculty Development Program in Drug Dependency and chair of the drug dependency concentration in the MSW program at the Graduate School of Social Work.

George W. Dowdall is visiting professor of community health at Brown University. He also serves as a consultant to the College Alcohol Studies project at the Harvard School of Public Health. His current research deals with social and organizational factors associated with binge drinking among college students. From 1980 to 1982 he was director of program evaluation at the Buffalo Psychiatric Center, and from 1982 has been professor of sociology at St. Joseph's University in Philadelphia.

Rosalind J. Dworkin is research supervisor at the Institute for Child and Family Services, an affiliate of DePelchin Children's Center in Houston, Texas. She has worked several years doing applied social research, particularly program evaluation. Her published work has included many articles about chronic mental illness and a recent methodology book, Researching Persons with Mental Illness.

Anthony Gary Dworkin is professor and chair of the Department of Sociology and director for research of the Texas Center for University School Partnership at the University of Houston. His recent books have included When Teachers Give Up, Female Revolt: Women's Movements in World and Historical Perspective (with Janet Chafetz), Teacher Burnout in the Public Schools, and Giving Up on School (with Margaret LeCompte). He and Rosalind J. Dworkin are completing a third edition of their text, The Minority Report. He is currently editor of a book series entitled "The New Inequalities," published by the State University of New York Press.

Kimberly A. Folse is an assistant professor at Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos.

Robert Granfield is assistant professor of sociology at the University of Denver. In addition to his scholarly interests in the sociology of drugs, he is widely published in the area of law and professional socialization. He is the author of Making Elite Lawyers: Visions of Law at Harvard and Beyond, as well as several additional articles on product liability, legal education, and social theory. He is presently conducting research on legal ethics and Italian drug policy.

David Hartman is associate professor of anthropology and associate dean of the School of Community Service at the University of North Texas. He is the editor of Immigrants and Migrants: The Detroit Ethnic Experience, as well as numerous articles. His research interests include poverty issues in North American cities.

Pierrette Hondagneu-Sotelo is assistant professor in the Department of Sociology at the University of Southern California. She is author of Gendered Transitions: Mexican Experiences of Immigration, (University of California Press, 1994). She is currently involved in efforts to form a domestic workers' association in Los Angeles, and she is also conducting research on the employers of domestic workers.

Dorothy Lonewolf Miller is a researcher with the Native American Research and Training Center, Tucson, Arizona.

Steven Ortiz is currently a Ph.D. candidate at the University of California, Berkeley. He held an American Sociological Association Minority Fellowship. He has presented research papers at annual meetings of the American Sociological Association, the Society for the Study of Symbolic Interaction, the North American Society for the Sociology of Sport, the Philosophical Society for the Study of Sport, and the Pacific Sociological Association.

Dennis L. Peck is professor of sociology at The University of Alabama where he teaches in the area of theory, criminology, juvenile delinquency, and social problems. His two recent books, published by Charles C. Thomas (1989) and Praeger Press (1993), and recently published research articles deal with a variety of topics including divorce, motor vehicle accidents, suicide, hazardous toxic waste disposal, and democracy. At present Dr. Peck is working on a co-edited book on demographic change.

Diane M. Pinchoff founded and is currently the director of the Program Evaluation Unit at Buffalo Psychiatric Center Buffalo, New York. Her most recent publications have appeared in Hospital and Community Psychiatry and Psychiatric Quarterly. Present areas of research focus on neuroleptic medication prescribing and dispensing practices associated with 30-day readmission rates; selection of indicators to monitor the quality of pressure ulcer care; overtime management of special treatment procedures; and management of a state hospital closure.

J. J. Ramondt is a professor with the Rotterdam Institute for Sociological and Public Administration Research at Erasmus University in Rotterdam.

Josephine Ruggiero is a professor at Providence College.

Kees Mesman Schultz, social psychologist, is director of the Research Center for Youth Welfare of the University of Leiden, The Netherlands.

Mary C. Sengstock is professor and former chair of the Department of Sociology at Wayne State University in Detroit, Michigan. She holds a Ph.D. in sociology from Washington University in St. Louis, Missouri. She is also a Certified Clinical Sociologist. Dr. Sengstock's areas of specialization include several areas with a strong clinical aspect, including applied sociology, family violence, and gerontology. She not only teaches courses in these areas, but also conducts in-service training for professional working with clients in those areas.

Karen Stephenson is a corporate anthropologist, assistant professor, and the president of the Human Resources Roundtable (HARRT) at the Anderson Graduate School of Management at UCLA. She consults with Fortune 1000 firms in the area of organizational communication and social networks.

Dexter Taylor has a B.A. in psychology from Virginia Commonwealth University and is completing a Ph.D. in psychology at the University of Maryland, College Park. He is interested in applied sociology. Among other honors he was a recipient of a Social Science Research Council award to study aspects of the urban underclass.

Louise C. Weston is affiliated with Environmental Strategies, Inc.

Norma Williams is currently associate professor of sociology at the University of North Texas. She is the author of The Mexican American Family: Tradition and Change (1990). In addition, Dr. Williams has published articles and chapters in books on bureaucracy, ethnicity and gender, and the Mexican American elderly.