ABSTRACT

This document focuses on libraries seeking and hiring professionals without the traditional Masters of Library Science (M.L.S.) degree but with specialized training and education in other areas. A survey was conducted in 1994, and 95 (80%) of the 119 ARL members responded. The SPEC flyer is a two-page summary of the survey and its followup examining the extent to which ARL libraries hire applicants with no M.L.S. degrees into professional positions and in what areas of specialization. The SPEC Kit contains survey results, including data on what actually constitutes a professional library position, what might be considered acceptable substitute credentials and experience for such positions in lieu of an M.L.S., and percentages of job searches filled at each university by non-M.L.S. applicants. It also provides position descriptions for those departments or specializations in which non-M.L.S. professionals are sometimes hired: (1) archives; (2) business operations; (3) human resources; (4) preservation; (5) reference/information services; (6) special collections; (7) systems; (8) technical services; and (9) other, especially public relations and development. A selected reading list contains 23 sources. (BEW)

INTRODUCTION

With increasing frequency, professional position announcements make reference to educational and experiential requirements that are broader than, or in lieu of, the traditional M.L.S./library experience qualification. In the not-too-distant past, librarians were "forced" to assume professional roles beyond the immediate scope of librarianship (e.g., personnel officer, systems analyst, facilities administrator, fund-raiser), but it now seems that library administrators are willing to seek and hire individuals with such specialized training and experience from within their respective professions or fields.

Further, a segment of the professional literature during the last decade or so, has vociferously argued in favor of moving beyond the standard M.L.S. pool of applicants and considering equally, if not giving preference to, candidates for librarian positions who possess other requisite educational qualifications and experience. Invariably, the main argument has revolved around the notion that to take full advantage of the opportunities presented by informational technologies, libraries need an infusion of diversified talent and a greater breadth of perspective than what the traditionally trained and oriented librarian brings.

In the spring of 1994, a survey was conducted to determine the extent to which ARL member institutions hire non-M.L.S. degreed applicants into professional positions. A follow-up survey of those institutions which reported hiring such persons into professional positions was conducted in summer 1995. Of the 119 ARL members, 95 (80%) responded.

SURVEY RESULTS

The survey sought to ascertain whether ARL libraries consider applicants without the M.L.S. degree for professional positions and, if so, into what types of positions such individuals are hired. Libraries that answered affirmatively were also asked to indicate: (a) the level of education and/or experience that would be considered in lieu of the M.L.S. degree; (b) the number of professional job searches conducted in the preceding three years; and (c) the number of searches which resulted in the hiring of a non-M.L.S. professional.

Although the survey instrument addressed these questions in a straightforward manner, the analysis of the results was complicated by two closely related issues: 1) what exactly is a professional position in an ARL library; and 2) are these positions first and foremost librarian positions to which additional (administrative or specialized) responsibilities are added, or are there in ARL libraries non-librarian professional positions for which there are separate formal education and requisite experience requirements.

The extent of hiring non-M.L.S. professionals, and in what areas. Of the 95 respondents, 56 (59%) libraries reported that they are willing to consider applicants without the M.L.S. degree for professional positions and further indicated the types of positions for which they would be considered by indicating one or more of the following categories: systems (73%); administration (64%); archives (56%); special collections (44%); preservation (35%); access services (20%); collection development (20%); cataloging (16%); reference (13%); and acquisitions (13%). Thirty-one percent of the respondents also checked "other," and specified a variety of positions: fee-based services, human resources, facilities management, business operations, media center services, and development.

During the three years (1991/92-1993/94) preceding the survey, more than 750 professional job searches were conducted by this group of 56 libraries. Of this same group, 36 (65%) libraries reported having filled 110 positions with non-M.L.S. professionals. In a follow-up survey to match actual hires with the type of position for which they were selected, 17 libraries reported hiring non-M.L.S. professionals for the following types of positions: administration (8); systems (7); archives (5); preservation (3); other (3); cataloging (2); acquisitions (2); and access services (1). Included in the "other" category were two development-related positions and a media services position. Although the response to the follow-up survey was limited, it does indicate that the pattern of actual hires closely matches the job categories into which this group of institutions reported being willing to hire.

Acceptable substitute credentials and experience. Respondents were asked to indicate the level of education or experience that would be considered in lieu of the M.L.S. degree. Of the 56 libraries willing to consider non-M.L.S. professionals, the following combinations of education and experience was considered acceptable: a combination of a master's degree in a subject area relevant to the responsibilities of the position, a Ph.D. in a relevant subject area, or prior experience in a professional capacity (26 libraries); a master's degree or a Ph.D. (11 libraries); a master's degree or work experience (8 libraries). Although a bachelor's degree was not listed as an option in the survey, it was mentioned by several respondents as a sufficient qualification for selected positions.

ARL libraries that do not hire non-M.L.S. professionals. Thirty-nine (41%) of the responding libraries reported that they do not hire into professional positions persons who do not possess the M.L.S. degree. From their comments, however, several definitional issues emerge. Some libraries indicated that they do in fact hire persons without the M.L.S. degree for positions that, in other institutions, are considered "professional" positions. One library noted that, "for the purpose of ARL statistics, the library does not count individuals without the M.L.S. degree as professional employees, and does not hire non-M.L.S. staff for professional positions ... although we do have ... staff without the M.L.S. degree who are considered to be professional employees." Although no definition of "professional position" was provided, it appears that most libraries responded to this question according to their practice in completing other ARL questionnaires, such as the annual ARL Salary Survey.

It is worthwhile to note that the current ARL Salary Survey general instructions state: "Since the criteria for determining professional status vary among libraries ... each library should report the salaries of those staff members it considers professionals, ... including, when appropriate, staff who are not librarians in the strict sense of the term, such as computer experts, systems analysts, budget officers, etc."

ISSUES & TRENDS

The question of non-M.L.S. professionals in research libraries is multifaceted and encompasses a set of related, but distinct, developments, some of which have arisen within librarianship and some of which have occurred in response to pressures from outside the profession. From the very beginning, there have been those who challenge the notion of librarianship as a profession. This debate seems to resurface every time a "non-librarian" is appointed to head a major library.

There has always been a readiness within the library to recognize that certain functions require specialized education or training for which the M.L.S. is not adequate preparation. This issue is brought clearly into focus by those who point out that the same degree that is required for entry to the profession is deemed, by the American Library Association at least, to be a terminal degree. There is no question, however, that increasingly libraries need professionals who possess additional, more advanced educational qualifications and/or specialized training and experience. This is driven by changes in library organizations, but it is also due in part to the rising credentialing spiral brought about by the expansion of graduate education and attendant specialization in academia.

As a result of information technology developments and adaptations, much of the work performed by librarians a short generation ago is now handled by support staff. At the same time, technology has created a point-of-entry for a sizable group of non-M.L.S. professionals working in systems and related areas. Library professionals—be they librarians or not—have a new set of functions and challenges to attend to, and these increasingly fall in the realm of management and administration.

As librarianship continues to debate the scope and content of its knowledge base and attendant educational requirements, librarians are left to promote, if not protect, their profession with a less than clearly articulated sense of what constitutes librarianship as a distinct profession. Because the core of the profession is not adequately defined, its boundaries are continually subject to adjustments based on the developments occurring in related, cognate fields. For university libraries, developments in the larger institution, as well as the broader higher education environment influence current and future directions.

CONCLUSION

Clearly, there are many people working as professionals in research libraries today who are not librarians. The same holds true for hospitals where not all professionals are physicians, law firms where not all professionals are lawyers and, even, colleges and universities where not all professionals are faculty. Like all other modern organizations, libraries require the services of a variety of people with specialized knowledge and training to function effectively and efficiently. What is important is not that libraries need other professionals, but rather how these positions are defined and their incumbents identified, recruited and, once hired, oriented to the nature of their responsibilities in a research library.

Beyond these observations, the authors find no conclusive evidence that ARL libraries are moving toward the appointment of individuals who lack formal library education into librarian positions. There is a wide gap between an expressed willingness to consider such individuals and actually making these appointments in any significant numbers. The data obtained for this SPEC Kit does not portray a shift in the customary requirements and hiring practices for librarian-defined positions. Further study might examine those individuals who obtained librarian positions without the customary credential to identify the institutional parameters that led to their appointment over others with an M.L.S. degree.

This Kit and Flyer were compiled by John G. Zenelis and Jean M. Dorrian, Temple University and were prepared as part of the OMS Collaborative Research/Writing Program. Initial survey construction and tabulation were performed by Bradley Westbrook, University of California, San Diego.

SYSTEMS AND PROCEDURES EXCHANGE CENTER: SUPPORTING EFFECTIVE LIBRARY MANAGEMENT FOR OVER TWENTY YEARS

This year marks the 25th anniversary of the establishment of the ARL Office of Management Services. Committed to assisting research and academic libraries in the continuous improvement of management systems, OMS has worked with its constituents since 1970 to seek the best practices for meeting the needs of users. The OMS Information Services Program maintains an active publications program best known for its Systems and Procedures Exchange Center (SPEC) Kits. Through the OMS Collaborative Research/Writing Program, librarians work with OMS staff in joint research and writing projects. Participants and staff work together in survey design, writing, and editing publications that provide valuable insights and management perspectives on emerging trends, issues, and concerns of the academic and research library community. Originally established as an information source for ARL member libraries, the SPEC program has grown to serve the needs of the library community world-wide.

WHAT ARE SPEC KITS AND FLYERS?

Published ten times per year, SPEC Kits and Flyers contain the most valuable, up-to-date information on the latest issues of concern to libraries and librarians today. SPEC Kits and Flyers are the result of a program of surveys on a variety of topics related to current practice and management of library programs in the ARL membership. The SPEC Flyer is a two-page summary of the status of a current area of interest. It comments on the present situation, reports on the results of an ARL membership survey, and forecasts future trends. The SPEC Kit contains the SPEC Flyer and the best representative supporting documentation from the survey in the form of policy statements, handbooks, manuals, cost studies, user studies, procedure statements, planning materials, and issue summaries. A valuable feature of each SPEC Kit is its selected reading list containing the most current literature available on the topic for further study.

SUBSCRIBE TO SPEC KITS

Subscribers tell us that the information contained in SPEC Kits and Flyers is valuable to a variety of users, both inside and outside the library. The SPEC Flyer is an inexpensive current awareness tool for keeping up-to-date on important library management topics. The documentation found in SPEC Kits is a good point of departure for research and problem solving. SPEC Kits and Flyers lend immediate authority to proposals and aid in setting standards for designing programs or writing procedure statements. SPEC Kits function as an important reference tool for library administrators, staff, students, and professionals in allied disciplines who may not have access to this kind of information.

SPEC Kits and Flyers can be ordered directly from the ARL Office of Management Services or through your library vendor or subscription agent. For more information contact the ARL Publications Department at (202) 296-8656, or fax (202) 872-0884. Information on this and other OMS products and services can be found on the ARL Gopher (gopher://arl.cni.org) and World Wide Web (<http://arl.cni.org>).

SUBJ: SPEC Survey and Call for Documents on Non-MLS Professionals in Libraries

This SPEC survey seeks information on current hiring by ARL libraries for professional positions of individuals without the M.L.S. degree. A SPEC kit with selected documents and a flyer summarizing and analyzing survey responses will be published later in 1994.

Whenever appropriate, please provide job descriptions, advertisements, or other examples of the kind of language your library uses in a job description to indicate to prospective applicants that other academic degrees and/or professional experience may be substituted for the M.L.S. degree.

Please return this survey and relevant materials to Bradley D. Westbrook, Mandeville Department of Special Collections 0175S, University Library University of California, San Diego La Jolla, CA 92093 by 11 April 1994. If you have questions, please contact Brad via email (bwestbrook@ucsd.edu) or by phone (619-534-6766). Thank you for your assistance.

SPEC SURVEY: NON-LIBRARIAN PROFESSIONALS IN ARL LIBRARIES

Of the 119 ARL institutions polled, 92 (77%), responded to the following:

1. Does your university library hire persons without the MLS degree into professional positions?

53 Yes 39 No

[If you answered no, please stop here and return the questionnaire.]

2. In which of the following areas will you university hire professionals without the M.L.S. degree?

3. Which of the following will your university accept in place of the M.L.S. degree?
Please check all that apply.

46 A master's degree in a subject area relevant to the responsibilities of the position
33 A Ph.D. in a subject area relevant to the responsibilities of the position
33 A number of years already worked in a professional capacity

4. a) Number of professional job searches your library has conducted in the last three years:

49 institutions conducted 729 searches

- b) Number of those positions filled by persons without the M.L.S. degree:

36 institutions hired 108 persons into professional positions without the M.L.S. degree.

15 percent of jobs posted were awarded to non-M.L.S. professionals

RE: Follow-up SPEC Survey and Call for Documentation on Non-Librarian Professionals

DATE: August 3, 1995

You are receiving this follow-up questionnaire because Question 4b. of the ARL SPEC Survey on Non-MLS Professionals in ARL Libraries (dated April 11, 1994) indicated that, in the last three years, your institution had filled a certain number of professional position(s) with persons not having an MLS degree. It would greatly help our analysis of the survey results to know the type of position for which each non-MLS professional had been selected.

Please return this survey by email to Jean Dorrian at jdorrian@astro.ocis.temple.edu no later than August 17, 1995

Please indicate, for each of the positions included in your answer to Question 4b., the type of position that was filled:

- Access Services (i.e., Circulation, ILL)
- Acquisitions
- Administration
- Preservation/Conservation
- Reference Services
- Special Collections
- Systems
- Cataloging
- Collection Development
- Archives
- Other (please specify: _____)

Because in certain cases the survey respondent is not the SPEC Liaison, attached below is a list by institution of the respondent's name and the answer they indicated for question 4b. Please forward this follow-up survey to the corresponding person indicated. Thank you.

THE JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY

MILTON S. EISENHOWER LIBRARY

HEAD, PRESERVATION DEPARTMENT

The Milton S. Eisenhower Library of The Johns Hopkins University offers an exciting opportunity in the field of preservation administration for an individual with vision, imagination, and the entrepreneurial spirit.

Boasting one of the oldest and best known preservation programs in an academic library in the United States, the Eisenhower Library's Preservation Department has often been in the vanguard of the preservation community:

- ▶ Major grants from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation supported a variety of training opportunities in preservation skills. This nationwide training program will continue.
- ▶ The library broke new ground by becoming the first academic library to sign a contract to purchase mass deacidification services from a commercial vendor.
- ▶ The library is leading efforts to create a statewide preservation program.
- ▶ The library has restructured its preservation program to focus primarily on collections conservation, while maintaining its capacity to perform single-item conservation.

The Eisenhower Library prizes energy, creativity, and professionalism and offers challenge, independence, and visibility.

RESPONSIBILITIES

- ▶ Develop and recommend policies and programs to conserve and preserve the library's collections.
- ▶ Organize, manage, and plan for all units reporting to this position: Conservation Bindery and Paper Lab, Collections Conservation, and Commercial Binding Office.
- ▶ Represent the library in preservation activities involving local, regional, and national agencies and organizations.
- ▶ Chair library-wide Preservation Committee.

QUALIFICATIONS

- ▶ Extensive knowledge of library preservation, conservation, and collection management principles, practices, and issues.
- ▶ Demonstrated administrative and supervisory experience, preferably in an academic research library preservation/conservation program.
- ▶ Excellent interpersonal and written and verbal communication skills.
- ▶ Training and experience in performing preservation or conservation treatment highly desirable.
- ▶ MLS from an ALA accredited library school desirable. (Not required)

The hiring range is $31,500-40,000 depending on education and experience.

Position available September 1, 1991. The search will remain active until the position is filled.

Representatives from the library would like to speak with candidates at the ALA summer meeting.

Excellent benefits including life and health insurance, and dental and tuition plans for staff member, spouse, and dependent children.

To apply, send letter of application, résumé, and three letters of reference to Mr. Edward Warfield, The Johns Hopkins University, Office of Personnel Services, 146 Garland Hall, Baltimore, Maryland 21218. AA/EOE

Head, Library Computing Systems

Reporting to the University Librarian, the Head of Library Computing Systems has primary responsibility for the overall support of existing automated systems, hardware, software, telecommunications, and networking. The Head takes a leadership role in the identification, evaluation, and implementation of new technologies within the University Libraries. This individual will be expected to develop solutions consistent with the information technology infrastructure and in close cooperation with other units in Information Systems, and will represent the Libraries in negotiations with computing vendors. The Head advises the University Librarian and other department heads on technical matters related to the management of information resources. The Head participates in planning, policy making, and resource allocation as a member of the Library Advisory Committee and will be expected to provide creative and dynamic leadership for both long- and short-term computing systems in support of the mission and goals of the University Libraries. Candidates must provide credentials and references that give evidence of the ability to work well independently and with colleagues in a rapidly changing and demanding academic environment.

The University Libraries are a member of the Association of Research Libraries, the Center for Research Libraries, and SOLINET. Virginia Tech is committed to the delivery of information services through decentralized computing. The Libraries goal is to bring library and information technology to every academic unit's functions and activities. The Libraries online public catalog is VTLS, running on a Hewlett-Packard 960. A library Gopher server is now running on a DEC 5000/50. Campus wide access to CD-ROM products and access to journal citation databases are planned for 1994. A 10 Base T Ethernet network is installed in Newman Library, connecting to the campus backbone.

REQUIRED QUALIFICATIONS: At least four years of increasingly responsible experience in advanced technical and management positions sufficient to demonstrate a strong understanding of academic library technology. Graduate degree in library science, information systems, computer science, or related discipline. Experience with system management and development on multiple platforms including DOS, Mac, and Unix-based operating environments. Experience with the planning, implementation, and operation of CD-ROM technology in libraries, and system networking and Ethernet. Familiarity with PC based programming for library applications, and library use of Internet, Gopher, and WAIS. Demonstrated ability to analyze and interpret technical information, and to explain system design and operations to diverse audiences. Demonstrated management skills. Excellent oral and written communication skills. Flexibility and the ability to work collegially.

TO APPLY: This is an administrative/professional faculty position, and a record of successful job performance and professional contributions will be expected. This is a restricted two-year appointment, and continuation beyond a two year period will depend on the needs of the Libraries. Initial rank and salary dependent upon background and experience. Salary minimum $45,000. Send letter of application, current resume, and the names, addresses, and phone numbers of three references to Cathy C. Robinson, Personnel Assistant, University Libraries, P.O. Box 90001, Blacksburg, VA 24062-9001. Review of applications will begin in mid-January and continue until the position is filled. Virginia Tech is committed to diversity among its faculty and staff, and particularly encourages applications from women and minorities.
