

Sensitivities in history teaching across Europe and Israel

Geerte M. Savenije<sup>a</sup>, Nicola Brauch<sup>b</sup> and Wolfgang Wagner<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Research Institute of Child Development and Education, University of Amsterdam, Amsterdam, the Netherlands; <sup>b</sup>Faculty of History, University of Bochum, Bochum, Germany; <sup>c</sup>Institute of Psychology, University of Tartu, Tartu, Estonia

ABSTRACT

Teachers of history will sooner or later encounter issues that are met with disbelief, protest, or feelings of discomfort by the pupils. This special issue aims to contribute to the field of research into teaching sensitive and controversial issues in history by integrating historical, educational and socio-psychological perspectives and theories. Using qualitative and quantitative methods, an interdisciplinary group of scholars studied history teachers' perceptions regarding sensitive issues in their teaching in their respective countries: Austria, Belarus, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Israel, Italy, the Netherlands and Serbia. Through cross-country analysis and in depth study of specific cases, it provides insights into the particular issues that are considered sensitive and the many factors at play, such as the individual teacher (his/her skills, knowledge, beliefs and identity conception), the local classroom composition, the national curriculum and national policies.

KEYWORDS

Sensitive historical issues; history teachers; cross-national perspective; teachers' beliefs; social representations; social identity

Teachers of history will sooner or later encounter issues that are met with disbelief, protest, or feelings of discomfort by the pupils. However, wide-scale studies in American and English contexts show that discussion of sensitive or controversial issues is not common practice in history and social studies classrooms (Nystrand et al. 2003; Saye 2013). Teachers have reported avoiding the teaching of sensitive topics because of a lack of time and an already full curriculum, but also because of fear of their superiors' or pupils' reactions, and because of personal ambivalence (Evans, Avery, and Pederson 1999; Kello 2016). Furthermore, teachers frequently report feeling they lacked the expertise – both in terms of content knowledge and for the facilitation of discussion – that is indeed necessary for teaching sensitive and controversial issues (Goldberg 2017; Wansink, Akkerman, and Wubbels 2017).

We use the term sensitive historical issues to refer to episodes in history in which a particular nation played a questionable or contested role. This usually applies to histories rooted in the trauma, suffering and (violent) oppression of groups. The term may also apply to perceived unfairness or harm caused to people by another group in the past (Sheppard 2010). The sensitivity may arise out of conflicts over collective memory and refer to the right way to remember or commemorate a historical figure or event (e.g. Waters and Russell 2013; Seixas and Clark 2004; Savenije 2016). A historical

CONTACT Geerte M. Savenije  g.m.savenije@uva.nl  University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands, PO Box 15780, room D7.091001 NG, Amsterdam

© 2019 The Author(s). Published by Informa UK Limited, trading as Taylor & Francis Group.

This is an Open Access article distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-NoDerivatives License (<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc-nd/4.0/>), which permits non-commercial re-use, distribution, and reproduction in any medium, provided the original work is properly cited, and is not altered, transformed, or built upon in any way.

issue may also be considered sensitive because of the ways in which teachers and pupils relate to the issue personally based on their perceived identities (Kello 2016; Zembylas and Kambani 2012). Pupils may, for example, support or resist historical agents or topics according to their in-group's current relations with the historical group or issue (Goldberg, Schwarz, and Porat 2008; Savenije, van Boxtel, and Grever 2014). For an elaborate discussion of what constitutes a sensitive historical issue, we refer to Goldberg, Wagner and Petrović (2019, this issue).

Teaching about sensitive issues in history can thus not be isolated from the cultural and socio-political context and may pose different challenges to teachers in different societal contexts (Misco 2012; Goren and Yemini 2017; Goldberg and Savenije 2018; Kello 2016). In Western democracies teaching controversial issues is often seen as an integral part of citizenship education, social studies education, or history education. Even so, present-day political polarisation makes public debate more contentious than ever and discussing a controversial issue may become quite a challenge in these democracies (Camicia 2008; Chikoko et al. 2011; Macdonald 2013). There are also tendencies to deny or falsify history in the service of contemporary politics (Wagner, Kello, and Sakki 2018). In countries that have recently experienced invasion or civil conflict and have different types of regimes, the goals of citizenship education or moral education are often different and may not always be easily aligned with discussing sensitive issues (Ho 2010). Furthermore, authoritarian political systems may not facilitate the open climate necessary condition for the teaching of such issues (Misco 2011; Abu-Hamdan and Khader 2014). Several studies in emerging democracies showed that although teachers were convinced of the benefits of discussing controversies and expressed the desire to do so, their teaching practice was not always congruent with their beliefs because of a lack of confidence and fear of negative responses of pupils or the wider community (Gundare 2002; Mhlauli 2012; Abens 2011). In another context, studies in divided societies such as Cyprus (Zembylas and Kambani 2012), Northern Ireland (McCully 2006; King 2009; Hanna 2017), Israel (Eid 2010; Eini-ElHadaf 2011), and Rwanda (Freedman et al. 2008; Bentrovato 2017) have shown that, although teachers and pupils were willing to teach and learn about controversial issues, pupils had difficulty fully engaging with perspectives other than their own.

This special issue complements these existing studies by focusing on various European countries that offer an interesting and urgent context for studying the teaching of sensitive issues in history. International movement of people into Europe from the 1950's onwards has imported new sensitivities into the classroom. Historical topics that may not be considered to be controversial in academia or the public realm become controversial in such classrooms because of the diversity of pupils and the narratives that they bring with them. In many aspects these narratives will not only differ, but sometimes also grossly contradict European canons of history enshrined in school knowledge. A clear example of this process is found in dealing with colonial pasts (Nieuwenhuys and Pires Valentim 2018). In various European countries, (descendants of) immigrants from former colonies of these countries have urged for a perspective change in the historical narratives about the colonial past. While, for example, the Dutch colonial history used to be narrated within the context of the Golden Age from the perspective of international trading by Dutch companies, recently, pressed by post-colonial migrants arriving from the 1970s onwards, attention has shifted to include the perspective of enslaved persons (van Stipriaan 2007). Still, one of the primary sensitivities surrounding this history is the extent to which it is acknowledged by the dominant native community and is included in historical representations in schools and museums (Oostindie 2009).

While some of the educational research on sensitive issues was inspired by theories of trauma and personal vulnerability (Sheppard 2010), sensitive issues always reflect inter-group and power relations within a society as becomes clear in the example above. Social psychological research indicates that social representations of the past are vital in forming a group's identity and consequently also affect intergroup relations (Liu and Hilton 2005; Psaltis, Carretero, and Čehajić-Clancy 2017; Wagner, Kello, and Rämmer 2018). It is known that high status and majority groups have an interest in denying the existence of inter-group conflict while low status and minority groups have an interest in emphasising the existence of conflict. Similarly, teacher perception and (re)presentation of potentially sensitive issues may depend on their own and their pupils' position in the society (Kello 2016; Klein 2017). Critical engagement with the past may threaten group esteem, arousing aversive emotions such as collective guilt and shame, which may lead to evasion or rejection of 'difficult knowledge'. Acknowledgment of past harm-doing may, however, also be seen as coming to terms with the past and restoring the moral image of a group (Leone and Sarrica 2014). Understanding these mechanisms is important in order to pursue a better understanding of why discussing sensitive issues in teaching practice is difficult to realise.

Using qualitative and quantitative methods, an interdisciplinary group of scholars launched a research project on sensitive issues in history teaching in their respective countries: Austria, Belarus, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Israel, Italy, the Netherlands and Serbia. The project was part of the framework of the EU-funded COST (European Cooperation in Science and Technology) project on 'Social Psychological Dynamics of Historical Representations in the Enlarged European Union' (IS1205).<sup>1</sup> The research that is reported in this special issue aimed at identifying the particular issues that history teachers experienced in class as well as the reasons the teachers identified as being responsible for an issue's sensitivity. Furthermore, we studied the methods teachers used for meeting such problems and solving conflicts within their classes, what they thought about revealing their personal historical and political standing or not, and how this related to their epistemic beliefs about history as well as the goals they saw in history teaching in general.

This special issue aims to contribute to the field of research into teaching sensitive and controversial issues in history by integrating historical, educational and socio-psychological perspectives and theories. Through cross-country analysis and in depth study of specific cases, it provides insights into the particular issues that are considered sensitive and the many factors at play, such as the individual teacher (his/her skills, knowledge, beliefs and identity conception), the local classroom composition, the national curriculum and national policies, as discussed by Goldberg, Wagner and Petrović. The comparative approach, cross-country and within country, reveals the contextualised nature of the sensitivity of issues and the ways in which issues are dealt with. Teachers' dealing with the sensitive historical issues are examined closer from an epistemological perspective (Sakki and Pirttilä-Backman) and by studying classroom strategies, including best practices, for dealing with such issues that may range from complete avoidance to using elaborate pedagogical approaches, specifically designed for the particular topic (Brauch, Leone and Sarrica). Furthermore, two papers focus on specific historical issues that appeared to be dominant in our data: WW2 and the Holocaust (Raudsepp and Zadora) and Islam and immigration (Savenije and Goldberg). The first in-depth study about the Holocaust revealed a relatively new aspect of teaching sensitive historical issues: an aesthetisation towards the violent past which can lead to a banalisation and even legitimisation of violence. The second paper about Islam and immigration elaborates on the theme of (self)silencing in relation to sensitive historical issues. Although these issues seem to be voiced more than silenced in the researched countries, the paper also shows that teachers' fears of pupils' voices led them to self-silencing. These insights are of interest to the curricular reflections of teachers, curriculum developers and policy makers. They reveal specific aspects of individual as well as collective historical consciousness as important social conditions shaping historical learning in the 21st century.

Note

1. http://www.cost.eu/COST\_Actions/isch/IS1205.

Disclosure statement

No potential conflict of interest was reported by the authors.

ORCID

Geerte M. Savenije  <http://orcid.org/0000-0003-1774-8771>

Wolfgang Wagner  <http://orcid.org/0000-0001-8272-0551>

References

- Abens, A. 2011. "Effects of Authoritarianism on the Teaching of Latvian History." Unpublished Doctoral Thesis, University of Latvia.
- Abu-Hamdan, T., and F. Khader. 2014. "Social Studies Teachers' Perceptions on Teaching Contemporary Controversial Issues." American International Journal of Contemporary Research 4 (10): 70–78.
- Bentrovato, D. 2017. "Accounting for Genocide: Transitional Justice, Mass (Re)Education and the Pedagogy of Truth in Present-Day Rwanda." Comparative Education 53 (3): 396–417. doi:10.1080/03050068.2017.1317997.
- Camicia, S. P. 2008. "Deciding What Is A Controversial Issue: A Case Study of Social Studies Curriculum Controversy." Theory and Research in Social Education 36 (4): 298–316. doi:10.1080/00933104.2008.10473378.
- Chikoko, V., J. D. Gilmour, C. Harber, and J. Serf. 2011. "Teaching Controversial Issues and Teacher Education in England and South Africa." Journal of Education for Teaching: International Research and Pedagogy 37 (1): 5–19. doi:10.1080/02607476.2011.538268.
- Eid, N. 2010. "The Inner Conflict: How Palestinian Students in Israel React to the Dual Narrative Approach Concerning the Events of 1948." Journal of Educational Media, Memory, and Society 2 (1): 55–77. doi:10.3167/jemms.2010.020104.

- Eni-ElHadaf, Y. 2011. "Jewish Adolescents Coping with Two Historical Narratives." In Junctions-Ways of Psychological-Social Reflection on Hebrew Society, edited by T. Litvak Hirsch and G. Zeitlin, 108–113. BeerSheva: BeerSheva University Press.
- Evans, R. W., P. G. Avery, and P. V. Pederson. 1999. "Taboo Topics: Cultural Restraint on Teaching Social Issues." The Social Studies 90 (5): 218–224. doi:10.1080/00377999909602419.
- Freedman, S. W., H. M. Weinstein, K. Murphy, and T. Longman. 2008. "Teaching History After Identity-Based Conflicts: The Rwanda Experience." Comparative Education Review 52 (4): 663–690. doi:10.1086/591302.
- Goldberg, T. 2017. "Between Trauma and Perpetration: Psychoanalytical and Social Psychological Perspectives on Difficult Histories in the Israeli Context." Theory and Research in Social Education 45 (3): 349–377.
- Goldberg, T., and G. M. Savenije. 2018. "Teaching Controversial Historical Issues." In International Handbook of History Teaching and Learning, edited by S. Metzger and L. Harris, 503–526. New York, NY: Wiley-Blackwell.
- Goldberg, T., B. B. Schwarz, and D. Porat. 2008. "Living and Dormant Collective Memories as Contexts of History Learning." Learning and Instruction 18: 223–237. doi:10.1016/j.learninstruc.2007.04.005.
- Goldberg, T., W. Wagner, and N. Petrović. 2019. "From Sensitive Historical Issues to History Teachers' Sensibility. A Look across and within Countries". Pedagogy, Culture and Society (This issue).
- Goren, H., and M. Yemini. 2017. "Obstacles and Opportunities for Global Citizenship Education under Intractable Conflict: The Case of Israel." Compare: A Journal of Comparative and International Education. 48 (3): 397–413
- Gundare, I. 2002. "Overcoming the Legacy of History for Ethnic Integration in Latvia." Intermarium 5 (3): 1–29.
- Hanna, H. 2017. "Dealing with Difference in the Divided Educational Context: Balancing Freedom of Expression and Non-Discrimination in Northern Ireland and Israel." Compare: A Journal of Comparative and International Education 47 (1): 17–31. doi:10.1080/03057925.2015.1119649.
- Ho, L.-C. 2010. "'Don't Worry, I'm Not Going to Report You': Education for Citizenship in Singapore." Theory and Research in Social Education 38 (2): 217–247. doi:10.1080/00933104.2010.10473423.
- Kello, K. 2016. "Sensitive and Controversial Issues in the Classroom: Teaching History in a Divided Society." Teachers and Teaching 22 (1): 35–53. doi:10.1080/13540602.2015.1023027.
- King, J. T. 2009. "Teaching and Learning about Controversial Issues: Lessons from Northern Ireland." Theory and Research in Social Education 37 (2): 215–246. doi:10.1080/00933104.2009.10473395.
- Klein, S. R. E. 2017. "Preparing to Teach a Slavery Past: History Teachers and Educators as Navigators of Historical Distance." Theory and Research in Social Education 45 (1): 1–35. doi:10.1080/00933104.2016.1213677.
- Leone, G., and M. Sarri. 2014. "Making Room for Negative Emotions about the National Past: An Explorative Study of Effects of Parrhesia on Italian Colonial Crimes." International Journal of Intercultural Relations 43: 126–138. doi:10.1016/j.ijintrel.2014.08.008.
- Liu, J. H., and D. J. Hilton. 2005. "How the past Weighs on the Present: Social Representations of History and Their Role in Identity Politics." British Journal of Social Psychology 44 (4): 537–556. doi:10.1348/014466605X27162.
- Macdonald, A. 2013. "Considerations of Identity in Teachers' Attitudes Toward Teaching Controversial Issues Under Conditions of Globalization: A Critical Democratic Perspective from Canada." Doctoral, University of Toronto.
- McCully, A. 2006. "Practitioner Perceptions of Their Role in Facilitating the Handling of Controversial Issues in Contested Societies: A Northern Irish Experience." Educational Review 58 (1): 51–65. doi:10.1080/00131910500352671.
- Mhlauli, M. B. 2012. "The Paradox of Teaching Citizenship Education in Botswana Primary Schools." European Journal of Educational Research 1 (2): 85–105. doi:10.12973/eu-jer.

- Misco, T. 2011. "Teaching about Controversial Issues: Rationale, Practice, and Need for Inquiry." International Journal for Education Law and Policy 7 (1–2): 13–24.
- Misco, T. 2012. "The Importance of Context for Teaching Controversial Issues in International Settings." International Education 42 (1): 69–84.
- Nieuwenhuysen van, K., and J. Pires Valentim, eds. 2018. The Colonial past in History Textbooks - Historical and Social Psychological Perspectives. Charlotte, NC: Information Age Publishers.
- Nystrand, M., L. L. Wu, A. Gamoran, S. Zeiser, and D. A. Long. 2003. "Questions in Time: Investigating the Structure and Dynamics of Unfolding Classroom Discourse." Discourse Processes 35 (2): 135–198. doi:10.1207/S15326950DP3502\_3.
- Oostindie, G. 2009. "Public Memories of the Atlantic Slave Trade and Slavery in Contemporary Europe." European Review 17 (3–4): 611–626. doi:10.1017/S1062798709000970.
- Psaltis, C., M. Carretero, and S. Čehajić-Clancy, eds. 2017. History Education and Conflict Transformation. Social Psychological Theories, History Teaching and Reconciliation. Cham, Switzerland: Palgrave MacMillan.
- Savenije, G. M. 2016. "An Intriguing Historical Trace or Heritage? Learning about Another Person's Heritage in an Exhibition Addressing WWII." In Sensitive Pasts. Questioning Heritage in Education, edited by C. van Boxtel, M. Grever, and S. Klein. 218–239. New York, NY: Berghahn Books.
- Savenije, G. M., C. van Boxtel, and M. Grever. 2014. "Sensitive 'Heritage' of Slavery in a Multicultural Classroom: Pupils' Ideas regarding Significance." British Journal of Educational Studies 62 (2): 127–148. doi:10.1080/00071005.2014.910292.
- Saye, J., and Social Studies Inquiry Research Collaborative (SSIRC). 2013. "Authentic Pedagogy: Its Presence in Social Studies Classrooms and Relationship to Student Performance on State-Mandated Tests." Theory & Research in Social Education 41 (1): 89–132. doi:10.1080/00933104.2013.756785.
- Seixas, P., and P. Clark. 2004. "Murals as Monuments: Students' Ideas about Depictions of Civilization in British Columbia." American Journal of Education 110 (2): 146–171. doi:10.1086/380573.
- Sheppard, M. G. 2010. "Difficult Histories in an Urban Classroom." Doctoral dissertation, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, MN.
- van Stipriaan, A. 2007. "Disrupting the Canon: The Case of Slavery." In Beyond the Canon, edited by M. Grever and S. Stuurman, 205–219. New York, NY: Palgrave MacMillan.
- Wagner, W., K. Kello, and A. Rämmer. 2018. "Making Social Objects: The Theory of Social Representation." In The Cambridge Handbook of Sociocultural Psychology, edited by A. Rosa and J. Valsiner, 130–147. 2nd ed. Cambridge, United Kingdom: Cambridge University Press.
- Wagner, W., K. Kello, and I. Sakki. 2018. "Politics, Identity and Perspectives in History Textbooks." In Representations of Colonial Pasts in (Post)Colonial Presents—Historical and Social Psychological Perspectives through Textbook Analysis, edited by K. van Nieuwenhuysen and J. Pires Valentim. Charlotte, NC: Information Age Publishers.
- Wansink, B., S. Akkerman, and T. Wubbels. 2017. "Topic Variability and Criteria in Interpretational History Teaching." Journal of Curriculum Studies 49 (5): 640–662. doi:10.1080/00220272.2016.1238107.
- Waters, S., and W. B. Russell. 2013. "Monumental Controversies: Exploring the Contested History of the United States Landscape." The Social Studies 104 (2): 77–86. doi:10.1080/00377996.2012.687409.
- Zembylas, M., and F. Kambani. 2012. "The Teaching of Controversial Issues during Elementary-Level History Instruction: Greek-Cypriot Teachers' Perceptions and Emotions." Theory and Research in Social Education 40 (2): 107–133. doi:10.1080/00933104.2012.670591.

Copyright of Pedagogy, Culture & Society is the property of Routledge and its content may not be copied or emailed to multiple sites or posted to a listserv without the copyright holder's express written permission. However, users may print, download, or email articles for individual use.