ABSTRACT

Past U.S. policies toward Indian and other Native American languages have attempted to suppress the use of the languages in government-operated Indian schools for assimilating Indian children. About 155 Native languages are spoken today in the United States, but only 20 are spoken by people of all ages. The Native American Languages Act of 1990 and the Alaska Native Language Act of 1990 recognize that language is the basis of Native culture and identity. They outline federal policy for preserving and promoting the rights of Native Americans regarding their languages but do not authorize grants for tribally designed and operated language survival and revitalization programs. The Native American Languages Act of 1992 would authorize funds for the Administration for Native Americans (ANA) to award competitive grants to tribal governments and Native American organizations for Native language development and preservation, including establishment of language training programs, development of materials, purchase of recording equipment and computers, transcription and analysis of oral testimony, and conversion of existing facilities. This report includes section by section analysis of the Act, cost estimates, and ANA testimony supporting the Act's aims but criticizing the establishment of a new grant program. (SV)

PURPOSE

S. 2044 would amend the Native American Programs Act to authorize the Administration for Native Americans to award grants to tribal governments and Native American organizations to help assure the survival and continuing vitality of Native American languages. It would also authorize the Secretary of Interior to enter into an agreement with the National Captioning Institute to determine the effectiveness of captioned educational materials in Bureau of Indian Affairs schools.

BACKGROUND

Earlier policies. The history of past policies of the United States toward Indian and other Native American languages is well documented. For most of the past century, the policy was that described in 1887 by then-Commissioner of Indian Affairs, J.D.C. Atkins:

The instruction of Indians in the vernacular is not only of no use to them, but is detrimental to the cause of education and civilization, and it will not be permitted in any Indian school over which the Government has any control, or in which it has any interest whatever.

Atkins pointed out, in his annual report to the Secretary of the Interior, that the policy was not a new one. In 1868, the "Peace Commission" named by President Grant declared that schools should be established, children required to attend, and "their barbarous dialect should be blotted out and the English language substituted." He also pointed out that in 1884 the Department of Interior, upon learning that both Dakota and English were being taught in one school, directed the Commissioner to inform the school principal that only English was allowed in instruction. Further, the Department said, "If Dakota or any other language is taught such children, they will be taken away and their support by the Government will be withdrawn from the school."

Of the Several hundred languages that may have existed five hundred years ago in what is today the United States, a noted linguist, Dr. Michael Krauss, estimated that about 155 languages are still spoken or remembered today. Of these, however, only 20 are still spoken by persons of all ages, about 30 are spoken by all adults, about 60 are spoken by middle-aged adults, and 45 are spoken only by the most elderly.

In an essay entitled, "The World's Languages in Crisis," Krauss declared that "Language endangerment is significantly comparable to * * * endangerment of biological species in the natural world. * * * Languages no longer being learned as mother-tongue by children are beyond mere endangerment, for, unless the course is somehow dramatically reversed, they are already doomed to extinction, like species lacking reproductive capacity."

In a 1991 preliminary state-by-state survey of Native languages (established in those states before this century), Krauss reported that sixteen states have three or more languages of varying viability. Among these are Oklahoma (23), California (30), and Alaska (20). In five states, two Native American languages are spoken, and in nine states, one language is spoken. In all, Native languages are spoken in 30 states.

As the Select Committee on Indian Affairs observed in its report accompanying the Native American Languages Act of 1990 (Senate Report 101-250), the result of a policy of reprimanding children for using their own languages in school was to make the children feel like foreigners in their classrooms and homelands. "Children were thus rendered incapable of forging a connection between two worlds which seemed so different from one another, yet which would have to be reconciled as it came time to choose future paths."

The Native American Languages Act of 1990. As a first step in repudiating past policies, the Congress enacted the Native American Languages Act of 1990 (P. L. 101-477). In that Act, the Congress declared it to be a policy of the United States:

To preserve, protect, and promote the rights of Native Americans to use, practice, and develop their languages;

To allow exceptions to teacher certification requirements in Federally-supported programs for Native language teachers and to encourage similar actions by state governments;

To encourage and support the use of Native languages as a medium of instruction to help assure language survival, student awareness, knowledge, and success, and student and community pride;

To encourage state and local education authorities to work with Native American governing bodies and parents to implement these policies;

To recognize the right of Native Americans to use their languages as a medium of instruction in all schools funded by the Department of Interior;

To recognize the right of Native American governing bodies to give official status to their languages for the purpose of conducting their business;

To support the granting of foreign languages credits in colleges and universities for proficiency in Native American languages and the acceptance of such credits for whatever foreign language requirements that may exist; and

To encourage all educational institutions, as appropriate, to include Native American languages as a part of the curriculum.

An additional requirement imposed by the Act mandated that the President direct Federal agencies to give support to the newly defined Native language policy, to evaluate their policies and procedures and the laws governing them to determine what changes might be required, and to deliver their recommendations for changes to existing law one year after enactment of the Act. Despite repeated requests of the Chairman of the Select Committee for such a government-wide report, only the Bureau of Indian Affairs provided a report to the Congress.

Need for new legislation. Even though the 1990 Act was widely applauded as a long-overdue recognition of the right of American Indians and other Native Americans to use their own languages and to have that right respected by government, it was largely a declaration of policy. It did not provide any authorization for appropriations that would assist tribal governments in pursuing its laudable goals. Without such assistance, there persists the risk that additional languages may be lost.

In its 1989 report accompanying the Alaska Native Language Act of 1990, the Select Committee declared that, "Language is the basis of culture." The report continued:

History, religion, values, feelings, ideas and the way of seeing and interpreting events are expressed and understood through language. When others place meanings and definitions on words that are from a language that is not their culture, the original meanings of the words and the concepts they represent become lost. When a language is lost or forgotten, the integrity and identity of the group is diminished.

The perpetuation of Native languages is thus an integral part of the continued existence of Native American cultures, heritages, and identities. Language, like religion and other traditional practices, must be fostered if the culture is to survive.

Even though a small number of Federal grants have been made in recent years in support of activities related to Native American languages, including four grants from the Administration for Native Americans for cultural centers, no existing statute specifically authorizes grants for tribally designed and operated language survival and revitalization programs.

MAJOR PROVISIONS OF S. 2044

The Native American Languages Act of 1992 (S. 2044) would authorize the Administration for Native Americans to award competitive grants for up to three years to tribal governments and Native American organizations to enable them to conduct activities in support of Native language development and preservation. Such activities could include establishment of language training programs, development of materials, purchase of recording equipment and computers, compilation, transcription, and analysis of oral testimony, and conversion of existing facilities when necessary for the conduct of language programs. Grants, which could not exceed 90 percent of the total costs of the program, would be made from a new authorization of $5 million for fiscal year 1993 and such sums as are necessary in each of the following four fiscal years. Another provision of the Act encourages tribal governments, at their discretion, to establish partnerships with schools, colleges, or universities.

The Act would also authorize the Secretary of Interior to enter into an agreement with the National Captioning Institute, Inc. for the purpose of carrying out a demonstration project to determine the effectiveness of captioning in Bureau of Indian Affairs schools.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

S. 2044 was introduced by Chairman Inouye for himself and Vice-Chairman McCain, and Senators Simon, Akaka, Burdick, Wellstone, DeConcini, and Murkowski on November 24, 1991, and referred to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

The Committee held a hearing on S. 2044 on June 18, 1992.

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION AND TABULATION OF VOTE

On July 2, 1992, the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, with a quorum present, considered an amendment in the nature of a substitute to S. 2044, agreed to an amendment proposed by Senator McCain, and voted unanimously to recommend that the Senate pass the amended substitute to S. 2044.

COST AND BUDGETARY CONSIDERATION

The cost estimate for S. 2044, as amended, as provided by the Congressional Budget Office, is set forth below:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, July 20, 1992.

HON. DANIEL K. INOUE
Chairman, Select Committee on Indian Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for S. 2044, the Native Americans Languages Act of 1992, as ordered reported by the Select Committee on Indian Affairs on July 2, 1992. Enactment of S. 2044 would not affect direct spending or receipts. Therefore, pay-as-you-go procedures would not apply to the bill.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER,
Director.

Enclosures.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE

1. Bill number: S. 2044.
2. Bill title: Native American Languages Act of 1992.
3. Bill status: As ordered reported by the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs on July 2, 1992.
4. Bill purpose: To assist Native Americans in assuring the survival and continuing vitality of their languages.
5. Estimated cost to the Federal Government:

[By fiscal years, in millions of dollars]

	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Native American languages:
Estimated authorization level	5	5	5	6	6
Estimated outlays	2	5	5	5	6
Captioning program:
Estimated authorization level	(¹)
Estimated outlays	(¹)
Bill total:
Estimated authorization level	5	5	5	6	6
Estimated outlays	2	5	5	5	6

The costs of this bill fall in budget function 500.

Basis of estimate: S. 2044 would authorize to be appropriated $5 million in fiscal year 1993 and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1994 through 1997 to allow the Secretary of the Interior to award grants for the purposes of assisting Native Americans in assuring the survival and continuing vitality of their languages. Authorization levels for fiscal years 1994 through 1997 were estimated by adjusting the 1993 authorization for anticipated inflation. Estimated outlays assume full appropriation of authorized amounts and are based on historical spending patterns of existing programs.

S. 2044 would also authorize the Secretary of the Interior to enter into an agreement with the National Captioning Institute to study the effectiveness of introducing captioned educational materials into schools operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Based on discussions with the staff of the National Captioning Institute, CBO estimates the costs of this project to be $300,000, to be spent fully in fiscal year 1993.

6. Pay-as-you-go considerations: Section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 set up pay-as-you-go procedures for legislation affecting direct spending or receipts through 1995. Because this bill would not affect direct spending or receipts, there are no pay-as-you-go implications.

7. Estimated costs to State and local government: None.

8. Estimate comparison: None.

9. Previous CBO estimate: None.

10. Estimate prepared by: Joshua Leichter.

11. Estimate approved by: C.G. Nuckols, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

REGULATORY IMPACT STATEMENT

Paragraph 11(b) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate requires each report accompanying a bill to evaluate the regulatory and paperwork impact that would be incurred in carrying out the bill. The Committee believes that S. 2044 will have a minimal impact on regulatory or paperwork requirements.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS

On June 18, 1992, the Committee received the following testimony from the Administration for Native Americans, Administration for Children and Families, Department of Health and Human Services, on S. 2044:

STATEMENT BY DOMINIC J. MASTRAPASQUA, DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, ADMINISTRATION FOR NATIVE AMERICANS ADMINISTRATION FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

Thank you for the opportunity to testify on S. 2044, the "Native American Languages Act of 1991." Commissioner S. Timothy Wapato sends his warm greetings to the Committee and would be here this morning to testify on this legislation if it were not for a long-standing out-of-town commitment.

S. 2044 would establish a new grant program to tribes and Native American organizations to assist Native Americans in assuring the survival and continuing vitality of their languages. While the Administration fully supports the concept of preserving Native American languages, we do not support the establishment of a new grant program within the Administration for Native Americans (ANA). ANA already has sufficient authority to carry out the purpose of S. 2044 under the Native American Programs Act of 1974.

In addition, we have several other concerns about this bill. We object to the 10 percent grantee match as proposed in Section 2 of S. 2044. Currently, grant authorities under the Native American Programs Act require 20 percent matching by the grantee. We see no justification for reducing the matching requirement for this new grant authority. Moreover, as a generally policy matter, we object to the use of other Federal dollars to satisfy the required grantee match. We recognize that this provision may have been included in order to ensure that the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) funded schools eligible for grants under this bill. However, we believe BIA funded school eligibility should be addressed in a different manner.

The goal of the Native American Programs Act is to promote social and economic self sufficiency among Native populations. This goal is sufficiently broad to encompass the purposes of preserving native culture and language, and ANA already provides funding to eligible organizations for this purpose. In the last few years, ANA has received an increasing number of grant applications from Tribes and organizations which focus on enhancing and strengthening tribal governmental structures through cultural heritage preservation activities.

Language maintenance, and in some cases, language renewal is a critical measure of the strength of a society. In fact, three current major studies focus on the effect and impact of Native languages on the social and economic circumstances of Native Americans. These studies attribute the loss and decline of these languages as a direct contributory factor to the black socio-economic situation of these societies. Both the White House Conference on Indian Education and the recently completed Indian Nations at Risk Task Force strongly recommended the inclusion of native languages in the development of overall strategies designed to assist all Native Americans.

A recent University of Minnesota study concerning "the State of Native American Youth Health" states, unequivocally, that efforts to address the many problems which face Native American youth must be built on the cultures, religions and traditions of American Indians and Alaskan Native communities. The study further states that "then and only then can we be assured that the solutions sought will be rooted in community values so critical to their success."

As one of our grantees put it, "teaching our language is important for the tenacity of the spirit. The way our life is viewed and our values expressed is through our traditional language. It is different than the European world view. Our world is described in an active alive way. Language is the bedrock upon which tradition and ritual is premised; the culture rests upon this. If a person has respect they lead a life of harmony. Our language teaches our people the right thing to do."

In response to these concerns, in 1990 President Bush signed into law the "Native American Languages Act" (Title I, Public Law 101-477). This legislation invests the United States government with the responsibility to work together with Native Americans to ensure the survival of cultures and languages unique to Native America. This law declares that it is the policy of the United States to "preserve, protect, and promote the rights and freedom of Native Americans to use, practice, and develop Native American languages."

Due at least in part to these legislative efforts, over the past several years there has been a significant cultural renaissance in Native American communities. Because of this renewed interest in the preservation of Native American languages, ANA has included among its funded activities language preservation and enhancement in its Coordinated Discretionary Program (CDP) to develop Native American Cultural Centers. Four grants were awarded for this purpose in FY 1991.

In summary, we recognize that language preservation and enhancement are important to the continuation of Native American cultures. The Administration for Native Americans will continue efforts to promote these activities throughout the Native American community. I thank you for the opportunity to testify and would be happy to answer any questions.
