ABSTRACT

In an effort to apply modern management techniques to the Columbia University Libraries, the Association of Research Libraries sponsored a study which called for restructuring the libraries to underscore functional relationships. The report of that study was reviewed by the libraries' administration and staff, and reorganization plans were made based on the study. First, the organization of the libraries was restructured, with designated key administrators and staff and new reporting relationships. Second, new staffing descriptions were established, in greater detail than previously. Third, new program planning resulted in a restructured budget, the program accounting technique of cost analysis, plans for a coordinated policy manual, and the creation of permanent planning structure. The report describes general goals and objectives, and for each unit of the organization lists principal administration, parent unit, role, objectives, functions, key working relationships, reports, and performance and evaluative criteria. Organization charts are provided for the six major groups and for the overall administrative structure. (LS)

INTRODUCTION

In 1969-1970, a preliminary investigation of problems in university library management was commissioned by the Association of Research Libraries in cooperation with the American Council on Education and with the support of the Council on Library Resources, Inc. That investigation found that generally the organization arrangements in research libraries "are too informal, poorly matched to current and emerging requirements and designed without benefit of modern management approaches" and that these institutions often have "inadequate staffing and provision for staff development."

In an effort to examine these issues in greater depth and to strengthen the organization and staffing of research libraries, the Association of Research Libraries sponsored a case study at the Columbia University Libraries, again in cooperation with the American Council on Education and the Council on Library Resources. The study team comprised representatives of Booz, Allen & Hamilton, Inc. and the University Library Management Studies Office of the Association of Research Libraries. Columbia was selected because it is in many ways representative of university and research libraries, and because its administration and faculty are dedicated to constructive change and improvement. Although several general principles and recommendations may be derived from the study, it was not intended to create a prototypical structure for all university libraries. Rather, it was undertaken to help prepare Columbia for its own distinctive future while possibly indicating administrative directions in which comparable libraries might proceed in order to enhance their own operations.

The unit descriptions in this present volume carry the study recommendations to a level of detail even more uniquely identified with the Columbia Libraries. They were developed entirely by the staff of the Libraries as part of the analysis and implementation of the study recommendations. The descriptions are valuable to some degree as general statements of purpose for components of all libraries but they are particularly meaningful as extensions of the case study. For this reason, the complete study report<sup>1</sup> should be examined to achieve the best understanding of the descriptions and their context.

The recommendations of the initial study team were comprehensive and forward reaching. They called for restructuring the Libraries to underscore functional relationships, with special attention to such goals as:

- linking resource development with resource utilization,
- fostering a higher level of expertise in the delivery of services, and
- consolidating the wide range of internal services required to support all aspects of operations of a major academic research library.

1. Association of Research Libraries. "Organization and Staffing of the Libraries of Columbia University: A Case Study," Redgrave Information Resources Corporation, Westport, Conn., 1973.

This refinement of concepts that fostered the traditional public service/technical service alignment was intended to provide an organization which would respond more effectively to the changing university and service environment and which would be able to provide better opportunities for individuals to develop professionally.

In considering the implementation of this approach to library organization and the reconceptualizations it entailed of the role of the library in the university, several needs were apparent to the Libraries' administration. First, because of the size of the Libraries and their complexity, there was a need to thoroughly analyze and refine the recommendations to be sure they were realistic and viable. For the same reasons, it was necessary to specify in detail what the organization would be and how it would work. Finally, it was important to achieve within the staff the broadest comprehension of the significance of the report and its implications by engaging the maximum number of professional staff members in the analysis and determination of the new structure and operating mode. Widespread participation would apply to these tasks the collective intelligence and breadth of library experience represented in the staff, whether that experience derived from years of responsibility in librarianship or recent graduate study in library school. It would allow scrutiny of the recommendations by library professionals intimately familiar with the Columbia library system to ensure that the proposed organization changes would work. Above all, it was believed essential to the spirit of the recommendations and to the success of the changes that the staff play an active role in determining the structure and direction of the new organization.

When the work of the Boaz, Allen & Hamilton study team was complete, their report was thoroughly reviewed at all levels of the Libraries' administration and staff. The Director of Libraries, with the study team, conducted a series of staff meetings to describe and explain the recommendations. These provided opportunities for the staff to understand the report and its implications, to discuss them and to respond to them. All staff members were invited to write their reactions to the report and any of its particulars. The Libraries' eight standing committees were also requested to review the report in the context of their special interests. Out of these meticulous review efforts some seventy pages of comments came as memoranda and reports. The consensus was that the concepts and recommendations of the study were fundamentally sound and logical, and that the Libraries would benefit from their application to our environment. Staff members disagreed with some specific details of the recommendations, but basically accepted and supported the general changes proposed.

It was clear when the report was issued that the study and its recommendations were thorough, but not detailed enough nor of a nature to permit their direct implementation. They were regarded as guidelines for the Libraries' organization and responsibilities, but not necessarily as complete nor sacrosanct specifications. The initial review activities were the first steps in a careful examination of the report and delineation of organization details which could be installed in an ordinary manner with minimal disruption to service and operations. The work of preparing the Libraries for the new structure and staffing was conceived as a planning process independent of the actual implementation, with the planning to proceed in three discrete but interrelated phases concerned with organization, staffing, and operations. The first phase, the Organization Definition, resulted in the unit descriptions included in this volume. Since their completion, the organization has been restructured according to the charts in each chapter. Key administrators and staff members have been designated and new reporting relationships established. The transfer of responsibilities is currently under way and is expected to take about six months.

Phase two, the Staffing Description, determined general staffing patterns and assessed the immediate impact of the new administrative structure on all professional staff responsibilities. This work indicated that in almost all cases positions remained functionally unaffected by the changed reporting and authority arrangement. Rather, there was a one-for-one correspondence between most positions in the old and new organization. Some new positions were created and some old positions with identifiable counterparts in the new organization were reconstituted. All the affected positions were described in detail based on the description of their parent unit in order to help individuals understand the scope of their new responsibilities. These position descriptions also contributed to the recruiting process and staffing of the new organization by delineating each position carefully enough to establish qualifications and seek candidates for it.

In an independent, but related set of staffing activities, the Personnel Office, through a special task force, developed a two-track schedule of position categories and professional ranks. This classification scheme and certain programs of staff performance evaluation and management training which have already been administered or are planned for the near future are additional tools which have been introduced to assist the staff development process.

Phase three, Operations Planning, has been a continuing effort directed toward the programs of the Libraries. It has resulted thus far in a restructured budget, the development of a program accounting technique of cost analysis, the creation of a permanent planning structure based on a high level planning and policy committee, and the establishment of a format and outline for a coordinated policy manual to guide decision making and encourage the distribution of authority throughout the Libraries.

The progress which has been made in planning and implementing the study recommendations was possible in large part because of events which took place within the University administration at the same time that the study was engaged in its work. In an independent and unrelated effort, the University administration undertook a review of the University's organization structure. Among other findings, they concluded that all of the University's information resources would be more effectively coordinated with academic programs if they were better integrated into the University's academic planning and decision making structure. Toward this end, a new position was created within a reorganized University administration -- Vice President for Information Services and University Librarian, reporting to the Executive Vice President for Academic Affairs. This position was assigned responsibility for the University's major information and academic technology resources, the Libraries and Computer Center, as well as for several other diverse but related academic information units. Although the study team recommended that the University Librarian be a vice president, the action of the University, based on its own perception of its needs, went beyond that recommendation by its administrative consolidation, at the vice presidential level, of libraries and all other information resources. In both cases the underlying principle was the same, namely that academic programs and their information based support are intimately related and that planning for both of them should take place in concert.

In a sense, although the University's decision was independent of the case study, it had the effect of beginning the implementation process. Several other key recommendations of the study were implemented shortly after the report was published, and these were instrumental in getting the full scale implementation started. The Planning Office was established with the designation of an Assistant University Librarian for Planning, and the Personnel Office was reoriented toward the recommendations through the designation of the Assistant University Librarian for Personnel. Two standing committees were established as a means to apply in special situations the experience and competence of professional staff members at all levels of the organization. The first of these, the ten-member Professional Advisory Committee was charged with providing comprehensive professional advice and counsel to the University Librarian, and with conducting specific studies in professional areas. The second, the six-member Staff Development Committee was made responsible for the review and recommendation of staff development plans and for individual professional staff performance review for purposes of recommending professional advancement. Each of these committees was to accomplish its special studies through the appointment of special task forces drawn from throughout the Libraries as well as from within the committee itself.

The designation of these positions and the appointment of the two committees to replace the former eight standing committees provided a framework within which the detailed planning for the new organization could take place.

The actual procedure followed during the Organization Definition phase of planning which produced the unit descriptions of this volume was coordinated through the Professional Advisory Committee. The Committee formed the core of three major task forces of twenty-two, thirty-three and fifteen members respectively. In total, about half the professional staff of the Libraries actively participated in the work. The first task force reviewed the basic premises of the study report at the highest levels of the recommended organization. It validated or modified the structure of the first and second levels of the organization and carefully described all the units comprising these levels. Based on these unit definitions, the second task force extended the descriptions to the most detailed level of the organization, making modifications to previously defined units or structural relationships based on further scrutiny and analysis. The third task force addressed itself to the so called allied libraries. After each round of analysis and definition, the work was reviewed by the Libraries' staff, the senior administrative body of the Libraries, and the Professional Advisory Committee.

At each major level of definition, the working procedure of the task force was the same. The task force was divided into three sections, each with PAC representation and a PAC member chairing the section. The task force met as a whole to discuss issues of general concern, and as sections to address issues relating to the group of units the section was working on. The sections formed two or three-person teams to prepare the detailed descriptions.

Each unit was defined in terms of its objectives, functional responsibilities, reporting and working relationships and performance criteria. As the descriptions were being prepared, it became apparent that certain definition elements were common to all units, whether service, resource or support oriented in their activities. These objectives, functions, and performance criteria as well as a general statement concerning reporting responsibility were compiled and listed separately to highlight them, to make the individual descriptions somewhat easier to work with, and to keep the more specific elements within each description from being obscured by the general items. Hence, each unit definition is comprised of two sets of elements which are equally important in guiding the performance of the unit. They are distinguished only by the fact that one applies to all units, and the other is more specifically related to an individual unit or small group of similar units.

The charge to the task forces called for them to consider thoughtfully the case study recommendations and the review documents prepared by the staff in response to the study. They were urged to consult with knowledgeable staff members when necessary in order to resolve issues but not to re-create the study. Instead, to work with the study report as a guide and to develop in detail for the proposed organization the elements and relationships which would achieve the principles of the report. If conflicts arose with the study recommendations or within the task force, the members were urged to seek facts and make decisions. The task forces responsibly fulfilled their charge and created an organization which has been acknowledged throughout the Libraries as adhering to the spirit of the study and delineating a realistic and effective administrative structure. Where the revised organization varies from the original recommendations, the differences are logical refinements which preserve the essence of the recommendations while contributing to more effective coordination of library activities, orderly transition to the new arrangement, and implementation within the limits of existing budgets. The following are highlights of the differences between the recommendations of the study team and the final work of the task forces:

In the Services Group, the Fine Arts Library and architecture instructional collection (Ware Library) were administratively and bibliographically maintained as integral parts of the Avery Architecture Library, reinforcing the distinctive character of this outstanding architecture and design collection. Interlibrary loan services were retained as a central operation for greater efficiency. On the other hand, as some minimal amount of decentralized material processing was considered essential for instructional reserve and other items requiring fast accessioning, small material processing sections were added to the Science and Social Science Centers, areas which are without immediate physical access to the central processing section. The Instructional Materials and Services Departments of the original recommendations were changed to Reference and Instructional Services Departments to expand and emphasize their role in directly assisting users with library resources. Because of the nature of reserve operations, they were included in the Access Services Departments of the Centers. Current documentation and technical reports services were seen as close to reference and other more individualized types of service, so they were affiliated with the Reference Departments of the Science and Social Sciences Centers.

In the Resources Group, the Bibliographic Control Division was organized functionally rather than by subject specialty, in order to permit greater flexibility in work scheduling and to facilitate procedural control. The resource development function was distinguished from resource utilization and organized as an administratively comprehensive unit with discipline specialization within it. Its purpose in providing effective coordination of collection policy and academic relations, library wide, remained unchanged. The Resource Utilization Office was conceived as a design unit to create and implement in service centers innovative library programs which would capitalize on the material and staff resources of the Libraries.

The major change in the Technical Support Group was the elimination of virtually all intermediate levels of administration to achieve an organization of autonomous but directly coordinated production oriented units. The systems development office, because of its breadth of concerns, need for high level support, and role in advanced planning, was removed from the Support Group and made an administrative part of the Planning Office. Similarly, the nature and level of responsibilities of the Financial Services unit recommended its assignment in the Planning Office.

The only organization units which remain to be described are those which were designated as distinctive collections in the case study. As the implementation of the basic operating organization proceeds, these somewhat more complex and unique libraries - the Law, Medical, Architecture, East Asian, and Special Collections Libraries, and the anticipated University Archival Collections - will be studied and broadly defined, applying the experience we have gained thus far. In this review and analysis, we will be guided but not constrained by the study report and the basic organization definition, recognizing that these distinctive collections are of a character which may call for a different administrative structure.

The organization description process afforded an opportunity for widespread, thoughtful consideration to be given to the role each functional unit would play in the context of the overall Libraries mission, and to what criteria might be used to measure the fulfillment of that role. The thoroughness and comprehensiveness of this analysis and organization definition activity were important for several reasons. The proposed organization embodied some new conceptualizations of the place of the library in the university environment. The analysis and discussion to determine the new structure provided a mechanism for each individual to reassess his position in the context of these new relationships and to realize fully the potential and significance of the changes. One of the primary goals of the reorganization was to provide better opportunities for individuals, at their choice, to broaden their experience, take advantage of their diversity of interest and expertise, develop professionally, and consequently function more effectively and in a more personally satisfying manner. The intense analytic and evaluative activity of the organization definition permitted the staff to develop an understanding of the Libraries' current and evolving organizational purpose and their role in it in terms which could ultimately be linked to individual objectives and be made meaningful in personal terms.

Hence, the articulation of the Libraries' reason for being and structure was significant for its involvement of a majority of the professional staff at all levels of experience and responsibility, and for the opportunity it afforded them to influence the direction and form of the organization. However, the process was equally important for the organization plan which resulted. In addition to a set of operating relationships, it has formed the basis of a structure and procedure for the ongoing planning and review of library activities on an individual as well as a unit basis. The unit definitions are a documentary base for the periodic examination of goals, evaluation of progress or activity relative to those goals, and adjustment of resources as conditions or objectives change. Along with Libraries policy, they are a set of general operating guidelines and a base for program planning.

We intend to sustain at an effective level staff participation in operational planning and review so that this initial effort will not gradually become a legendary event unrelated to the continuing service commitment of the Libraries. We hope this work was an initial experience in our movement toward a participative environment in which the staff will be more personally involved in the ultimate purpose of the Libraries through comprehension both of that purpose and of their role in achieving it.

The case study was undertaken in part because of the dynamic nature of the academic and research library environment and the desire to make these libraries more flexible and responsive to changing needs. Implicit in the results of the study and the subsequent implementation effort are the climate and potential for change in the new organization. The unit definitions were prepared as a description of the organization at time zero. They reflect the perceptions of the study team and the Libraries staff at the point of completion of the study and are, not unexpectedly, biased in some of their details toward familiar or traditional operating modes. This is reasonable, since the Libraries will continue to function as libraries. This fact was evident in the definition of their components, and it naturally imposed logical constraints on the structure of the new organization so that certain elements retained their traditional functional relationships. If there is conservative bias in the new structure, it is in some respects desirable. The change in organization and operating patterns will require changes in individual staff and administrative behavior. It would be unrealistic to expect these changes to occur abruptly, and possibly counterproductive in terms of staff reaction and operational continuity. The changes will involve education, individual exploration of different approaches, testing of new personal modes, and gradual movement towards more effective ways of operating. The capability and desire to develop in these ways vary greatly among individuals, and it is important that everyone be able to choose growth patterns according to his own personal and career objectives.

Thus, the new organization as it has been described during the implementation planning is the starting point for the evolutionary change which the case study and restructuring were intended to permit. To the extent that descriptions of similar units are uniform or consistent, they reflect the consensus of the task forces. In time, the descriptions will evolve toward a more individual character, as each unit's self perception is influenced by its unique administrative or operating style and needs. The unit descriptions are working tools. As we continually review the objectives and other aspects of the Libraries organization and performance, validating or modifying elements as goals or academic priorities change, details of the unit definitions and even structural relationships will change. The objectives were not developed as specific, time oriented targets, but rather as broad goals motivating the unit or expressing its reason for being. It will be a primary purpose of the ongoing planning effort to translate these general goals into more directly measurable objectives and relate them more immediately to performance criteria. In some areas there is a need for informative or evaluative reports to effectively monitor activities and support decision making. The development of appropriate reporting mechanisms will be a feature of the continuing implementation of the study report and unit descriptions. The administrative titles used in the descriptions are interim position descriptors intended to afford the maximum flexibility in designating individuals to these responsibilities. Some of these are likely to change as the organization progresses. As the unit definitions evolve toward more specific reflections of the organization elements they describe, their full value to the Libraries as a mechanism for self evaluation and improvement should be realized. We look forward to the enhancements of our service and operations these tools are meant to bring about, and to the challenge of achieving them. This is the most difficult part of the overall effort, and the part that is about to begin.

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES

Goals and Objectives

Purpose

The purpose of the Columbia University Libraries is to provide recorded information in all of the subject fields pertinent to University goals and needed by students and the academic staff of the University. Further, because many specific Columbia collections are of national and even international importance, the libraries recognize a service obligation not only to the Columbia community but also to certain scholars and students from outside the University who require for their research access to unique materials or specific distinctive collections.

Role

The Libraries strive to fulfill the purpose by (1) identifying and acquiring (or otherwise making available) library materials in all formats needed for instruction and research within the University or required to maintain the quality of distinctive collections, (2) developing reference, bibliographic, and other specialized library services that effectively and imaginatively reinforce academic objectives, (3) making resources accessible through the support services and facilities of central and specialized library units, and (4) assuring the security and condition of the collections.

Program Objectives

These general statements suggest the range of specific objectives guiding Columbia's Libraries as they seek to achieve their purpose and fulfill their role. The Libraries will:

1. Select and acquire the information resources most needed to support the research and instructional programs of Columbia.
2. Assure continuing development of the distinctive collections that have been established at Columbia, thus acknowledging the obligations inherent in custodianship of significant resources of regional, national and international importance.
3. Make needed materials readily available to Columbia students and academic staff, and others as appropriate, whether from Columbia collections, by purchase, or on loan from other libraries.
4. House library collections and service activities in space that meets staff and user requirements, assures collection security, safeguards the condition of resources, and enhances operating performance.
5. Maintain and, when possible, improve the physical condition of materials in the collections, with special attention to protecting the unique items and distinctive collections or categories of materials that are an essential part of the record of humanity.

6. Assist users in the processes of identifying and locating recorded information, understanding organization of library resources, and utilizing library services.
7. Develop better ways to offer library resources and to provide additional services for users as means for improving the quality of academic programs and the effectiveness of research activity.
8. Maintain purposeful working relationships with academic departments and with other offices of the University to help assure development of library capabilities that are consistent with academic objectives and University plans.
9. Create opportunities for individual staff members to define and achieve their career goals in the context of the general objectives and staffing requirements of the library.
10. Promote and create constructive working relationships with other research libraries and related organizations to obtain access to resources and to effect development of programs of many kinds that would meet needs of scholars and improve performance of individual libraries in significant ways.

COMMON ORGANIZATION DEFINITION ELEMENTS

Objectives

1. Enhance knowledge of library procedures and facilitate decision making by the maintenance of statistical and other departmental records.
2. Foster effective relations between the Libraries and: students, faculty, researchers, suppliers, scholarly institutions, funding bodies and government agencies.
3. Encourage the development and implementation of new ideas for improving library service.
4. Foster high levels of motivation and staff satisfaction.
5. Provide opportunities for staff development.
6. Encourage the improvement of work flow procedures.
7. Integrate the goals of the unit with overall library goals as well as with those of its superordinate units.

Functions

1. Participate in planning for the University Libraries.
2. Participate in the development of policies and procedures related to activities involving the unit.
3. Maintain effective working relations.
4. Maintain appropriate and accurate statistical and other departmental records.
5. Develop and use quantitative and qualitative measures for continual self-evaluation.
6. Keep areas assigned to the unit in proper and orderly condition and work with the General Services Department and Building and Grounds to ensure that these areas and equipment are adequately maintained.
7. Participate in the development and implementation of staff training programs.

Performance and evaluative criteria:

1. Staff attitudes and development
2. Cost-effectiveness.
3. Integration of the goals of the unit with other library goals.
4. Timeliness, accuracy and appropriateness of unit statistics.
5. Effectiveness of working relations.

Role: To exercise general executive responsibility for planning, organizing, staffing, directing, and controlling all Libraries, information processing facilities and technological aids to instruction and research within the University.

Objectives

1. Broadly formulate and assure the implementation of effective library, data processing, and other information based programs in support of the instructional and research activities of the University.
2. Assure the effective use of material and staff resources in the achievement of academic information service objectives.
3. Assure the responsible application of fiscal resources available for information services.
4. Sustain and enhance the level of excellence of the University's information resources.
5. Obtain intellectual and material support from sources outside the University.
6. Establish effective working relationships within the University and with outside institutions.

Functions

1. Organize, control and evaluate activities directed toward satisfying the academic information needs of the University.
2. Designate all subordinate officers and assistants.
3. Establish policies, operating priorities, and rules in support of information service activities.
4. Give continuous study to the needs and conditions of University academic information resources.

TECHNICAL SUPPORT GROUP

LIBRARY TECHNICAL SUPPORT GROUP

Principal Administrator: Director, Library Technical Support Group

Parent Unit: Office of the Vice President for Information Services and University Librarian.

Role: To provide business, processing, acquisition, technical and support services necessary to maintain the functioning of the library system.

Objectives

1. Improve the operation of all library units relying on Support units by providing efficient and economic service and by participating in the establishment of policies which further such service.
2. Promote the security of library patrons and staff and to provide building maintenance and security by serving as liaison with the Department of Buildings and Grounds.
3. Contribute to sound finances by participating in maintaining library accounts and in producing financial reports.
4. Contribute to sound finances by participating in the maintenance of complete and accurate records of library Administrative Accounts and in the monitoring of their expenditures.
5. Support library operations by obtaining and distributing library supplies and equipment in the most efficient and economic way.
6. Enhance the effectiveness of collection development by monitoring requests for materials to prevent unwanted duplication and unnecessary expenditure of library funds.
7. Support the process of collection development through the proper acquisition of designated materials and by participating in selection.
8. Improve bibliographic control over materials by maintaining records before permanent bibliographic control is achieved and by participating in the efficient production and maintenance of permanent bibliographic records.
9. Contribute to national bibliographic and scholarly resources by working with outside projects, agencies, and individuals.
10. Support the library's role as a repository of research and other materials by providing preservation, binding and reprographic services.
11. Facilitate research and the dissemination of information by providing a wide range of reprographic services.
12. Facilitate research and use of the collections by the physical preparation of materials.
13. Dispose of unwanted material in the most beneficial way.
14. Facilitate operations by maintaining the efficient delivery and shipment of library materials and mail.

15. Enhance library operations and services through the control of operational computer-assisted systems.

Functions

1. Control budgets for funds allocated to the Library Technical Support Group and participate in budget planning.
2. Participate in maintaining library accounts and in producing financial reports.
3. Participate in the maintenance of complete and accurate records of library Administrative Accounts and in the monitoring of their expenditures.
4. Act as liaison with the Department of Buildings and Grounds in promoting the security and maintenance of all library facilities and equipment.
5. Coordinate the purchase, rental and distribution of supplies and equipment.
6. Perform bibliographic searching.
7. Perform acquisitions services for all forms of material.
8. Maintain and make accessible records of the acquisition, processing and payment status of materials.
9. Provide information pertaining to materials acquired and participate in making them available.
10. Assist in collection development by bringing materials and information to the attention of selection officers and by selecting certain materials.
11. Participate in the creation of bibliographic control records, by producing catalog cards, performing sorting and shelisting activities and other means.
12. Maintain the general card catalogs and central shelflists, including repair, filing and correction of cards; and communicate changes to those in charge of the departmental catalogs.
13. Work with outside projects, agencies, and individuals (e.g. NUC, reprint publishers, NPAC, non-Columbia librarians, etc.)
14. Be responsible for providing preservation services of a technical nature, such as binding, repair, photocopying etc.
15. Provide reprographic services.
16. Prepare library materials for use (e.g. plating, marking, binding).<sup>1</sup>
17. Keep abreast of the latest techniques and information pertaining to functions assigned to the Support Group.
18. Coordinate and supervise the disposal of unwanted material in the most beneficial way.
19. Be responsible for library shipping, receiving, mail and delivery services.

20. Coordinate and manage operational computer assisted systems, including data processing and maintaining liaison with the Systems Office and the Computer Center.
21. Consult with and advise staff members in service centers and elsewhere about policies and procedures pertaining to activities performed centrally by the Support Group.

Key Working Relationships

1. All organizational units and individuals in the library involved with support services.
2. Other university departments and with individuals and organization outside the university.

Reports

Statistical and other reports as needed to:

- a. Units of the library involved with support services,
- b. Planning and Systems Offices.

Performance and Evaluative Criteria

1. Accuracy of records.
2. Quality of technical work.
3. Satisfaction of other library units relying on Support Group services.

Note

While the Support Group is responsible for the actual binding activity, the preparation of periodicals for binding will have to occur in the various units which service the periodicals to ensure maximum user access. (This can be reconsidered when a computer based serials system is developed.)

DATA CONTROL DEPARTMENT

Principal Administrator: Head, Data Control Department

Parent Unit: Library Technical Support Group.

Role: To provide computer-based processing services ancillary to activities necessary to maintain the functioning of the library system.

Objectives

1. Improve the operation of all library units relying on the Data Control Department by providing efficient service and by participating in the establishment of policies which further such service.

2. Proper payment of invoices to make the most beneficial use of budgeted funds.
3. Completeness, accuracy, and accessibility of bibliographic records, files and tools.
4. Promptness, completeness, and accuracy of reporting of information from the Section's records, files and tools to other units of the Library as required.
5. Success in communicating Documents Acquisitions Section's policies and procedures to other units of the Library which depend on the Section's services.
6. Satisfaction of other library units relying on the Documents Acquisitions Section.

Note

1. The word documents is used throughout, unless otherwise modified, to include both document serials and monographs. For serials other than document serials, see the description of the Serials Acquisitions Section.
2. Currently the Documents Acquisitions Section performs certain activities that are to be transferred to the proposed Documents Room. These activities include holding current and unbound issues of Congressional hearings and Serial Set materials, determining whether all materials for a certain session or Congress are received, arranging them into volumes and assigning call numbers and volume numbers, listing contents or other information as needed in Public Serials Catalog, Official Serials Catalog, and Shelf lists, typing binding slips, and related duties. It is probably best for the new Documents Acquisitions Section to continue these activities until a Documents Room is set up, perhaps until after the suggested long-term Task Force investigation of documents at Columbia has been completed. Objectives and functions relating to these tasks are adequately covered by Objective 4 and Function 18.

Principal Administrator: Head, Serials Acquisitions Section.

Parent Unit: Serials and Documents Acquisitions Department.

Role: To provide serials acquisition, processing and other services necessary to support the functioning of the library system.

Objectives

1. Improve the operation of all library units relying on the Serials Acquisitions Section by providing efficient and economic service and by participating in the establishment of policies which further such service.
2. Facilitate the functioning of library units and contribute to sound finances by participating in the maintenance of library accounts designated for expenditures for serials.
3. Enhance the effectiveness of collection development by monitoring requests for serials to prevent unwanted duplication and unnecessary expenditure of library funds.
4. Support the process of collection development through the proper acquisition of designated serials and by participating in their selection.
5. Improve bibliographic control over serials by maintaining records before permanent bibliographic control is achieved and by participating in the creation and maintenance of permanent bibliographic records.
6. Increase the library's informational resources by maintaining kardex and other records of serials.
7. Participate in the disposal of unwanted serials in the most beneficial way.

Functions

1. Participate in the budgetary process for the Serials Acquisitions Section.
2. Participate in monitoring library accounts for expenditures connected with serials.
3. Participate in maintaining and monitoring deposit accounts (e.g. Microsurance)
4. Monitor requests for serials to prevent unwanted duplication and unnecessary expenditure of library funds.
5. Act as a final check or review on the appropriateness of searching and verification performed elsewhere and perform additional types of searching and verification not performed elsewhere in order to support the activities of the Serials Acquisitions Section.
6. Recommend the best method of acquiring serials.
7. Acquire serials through purchase by the proper placing of standing orders for continuation and periodical subscriptions.
8. Acquire back issues, replacement issues, sample copies and serial catalogs (including document serial catalogs) by proper purchase of gift solicitation.

9. Maintain all subscriptions on an active basis by monitoring, soliciting information, claiming, reordering, acknowledging receipt of gifts and exchanges, etc.
10. Receive, check in and route certain serials.
11. Approve and prove payment of invoices and reimbursement of credits incurred as subscription or issue costs or as dues or fees for any of the Section's various subscriptions or subscription plans, services, memberships, blanket orders or cooperative projects.
12. Originate claims for the Circulation Department of the Humanistic and Historical Studies Center for all Library materials lacking from invoices, and for other materials that fall outside the normal claiming process.
13. Order, approve payment for and maintain records of serials used as exchange materials.
14. Cancel or transfer serial subscriptions when necessary.
15. Create, maintain and make accessible records of:
  - a) all serials acquired as well as those serials being offered, discarded, routed to other institutions or disposed of in other ways.
  - b) services, materials, and/or privileges provided to the Libraries by library, University or personal memberships, services, blanket orders or cooperative projects.
16. Acquire and make effective use of knowledge, information and bibliographic tools relating to serials.
17. Provide access to interpretation of and information from the Section's materials, files, records and tools.
18. Bring serials and information to the attention of selection officers and to assist the selection officers.
19. Supply information needed for the creation and maintenance of permanent bibliographic control records.
20. Participate in the disposal of unwanted serials.
21. Assist in monitoring policies, materials, and records in certain categories in order to satisfy various regulations and restrictions.
22. Have central responsibility for correspondence on most matters concerning the acquisition of serials.
23. Consult with and advise staff members in Service Centers and elsewhere about policies and procedures pertaining to activities performed centrally by the Serials Acquisitions Section.

Key Working Relationships

1. Organizational units and individuals in the library involved with the Serials Acquisitions Section.
2. Subscription agencies.

Reports

Statistical and evaluative reports as policy requires.

Performance and Evaluative Criteria

1. Proper placing of serial orders.
2. Proper payment of invoices to make the most beneficial use of budgeted funds.
3. Completeness accuracy and accessibility of bibliographic records, files and tools.
4. Promptness, completeness, and accuracy of reporting of information from the Section's records, files and tools to other units of the library as required.
5. Success in communicating Serials Acquisitions policies and procedures to other units of the library which depend on the Section's services.
6. Satisfaction of other library units relying on the Serials Acquisitions Section.

NOTE

Excludes document serials unless otherwise noted.

SERIALS ACQUISITIONS SECTION

It is recommended that the searching activities presently being performed in the Serials Acquisitions Section be kept there for the following reasons:

- a. Serials searching involved more than "order" searching (e.g., offers, invoices, etc.)
- b. Searching expertise will exist in the Serials Acquisitions Section in order to accommodate the above, so why have several people do what one now does.
- c. The expertise needed for searching, as well as that for revising searching, of serial materials and in serial files is extensive. It is obvious also that the review of the searching is sufficient and would be best done by the Serials staff.
- d. Serials searching and revising is more convenient and immediate if searchers are at hand to the serials revisor.
- e. Speed and control of searching is best accomplished in the Serials Acquisitions Section.
- f. The expertise of using and interpreting serials files would have other immediate and ancillary uses which would support Serials activities.
