ABSTRACT

This guide provides an introduction to many different types and sources of social studies materials. The guide is divided into three sections representing classroom material, outreach activities, and professional resources. Each section is subdivided by resource type. Larger sections use categories to facilitate location of material by curriculum field; the typical arrangement of categories is General, Anthropology/Cultures, Civics, Economics, Geography, and History. Smaller sections are alphabetically arranged by the title of the resource, organization, or program. The first section covers "Classroom Instructional Resources," such as textbooks, trade books, multimedia resources, curriculum guides, journals, Web sites, dramatizations and model programs, games and simulations, and human resources. The second section covers "Outreach Activities," which typically involve experiences with learning sites or programs which are located or originate outside the school building. The third section covers "Professional Development and Planning Resources" for teachers. The index provides integrated access by subject and organization to all 845 entries. (BT)

Introduction

This guide provides an introduction to many different types and sources of social studies materials. Teaching social studies requires a familiarity with local, national and global resources. Teachers have a wide range of choices in selecting instructional materials and locating suitable curriculum units.

The guide is divided into three sections representing classroom material, outreach activities and professional resources. Each section is subdivided by resource type; larger sections use categories to facilitate location of material by curriculum field. The typical arrangement of categories is General, Anthropology/Cultures, Civics, Economics, Geography and History. Smaller sections are alphabetically arranged by the title of the resource, organization or program.

The first section covers Classroom Instructional Resources. In the case of Textbooks and Trade-Book Sources and Multi-media Resources the guide lists bibliographies, indexes and review sources which may assist evaluation; it does not provide a full listing of actual texts and media. The section on Curriculum Guides introduces teachers to information databases which can assist them in locating curriculum sources published by state, local, and federal educational agencies and private associations on virtually any subject and at any level they may wish to teach. Journals are more fully covered with notations of local library holdings, and audience specification (professional and student/teacher) and indexing sources. World Wide Web Sites are also given broad coverage, however this medium is so extensive that any listing is bound to be selective and partial; the guide has selected durable and well-rated sites. Dramatizations and Model Programs provide a valuable enrichment source; teachers should inquire about new programs, for many drama groups have changing venues. The section on Games and Simulations is primarily oriented toward reference and review literature to assist material selection. Human Resources offer a great range of possibilities; Rhode Island is a microcosm of the world with great cultural diversity among its residents and many international students who study in the colleges and universities of the state.

The second section covers Outreach Activities which typically involve experiences with learning sites or programs which are located or originate outside the school building. The list of Field Trip opportunities covers many of the major social studies-related sites in Southeastern New England within a 100 mile radius of Rhode Island. Teachers in this region are extremely fortunate because of the rich diversity of museums, economic and political organizations, and historic sites. The list of Libraries covers all local public libraries where students often seek resource material for papers and projects; an attempt was made to mention the highlights of collections as they pertain to social studies, however, there is likely to be more socially relevant material in each particular collection than cited here. Special libraries like the Curriculum Resources Center at Rhode Island College and other public college/university libraries where teachers can research or borrow material are also listed. Student Activity Programs such as award programs, contests and competitions are selectively covered: there are many diverse opportunities in this area with new announcements coming frequently in the newsletters of professional organizations. Student Exchange and Travel Opportunities are extensive; the guide lists reference guide books that will help students, parents or teachers locate appropriate programs; some of these sources also provide basic information about how to proceed with arranging such experiences.

The third section covers Professional Development and Planning Resources for teachers. Professional Organizations are a vital source of information, new publications, conferences and teacher education activities; all the major social studies organizations are included in this guide along with a selection of other more specialized groups. The section on Professional Standards Literature incorporates a combined list of very current professional books which expound the latest trends and basic literature on the new national standards in each field of social studies. Curriculum Development and Enrichment Projects offers an extensive list of many different organizations, centers and innovative projects which support teachers with literature, curriculum units, consultation services, workshops and other services. Finally, the section on Professional Growth Opportunities for Teachers covers awards, conferences, exchange opportunities, grants, institutes and study programs which provide new incentives and enrichment projects that may improve instructional competence.

The index provides integrated access by subject and organization to all 845 entries of the guide. Teachers interested in particular subjects, persons, micro-topics, different types of instructional materials, local town resources, specific agencies, associations, or projects will find that the index can save time in searching this document.

A senior high program sponsored by Rhode Island Social Studies Association with 30 participating public and private schools. The schools appoint students to sit as representatives in the Senate and House or to fulfill the role of legislative clerk. The experience is organized in October with committee chair selection; plans then proceed with the 3 day model legislature convening in April. The first day is made up of committee meetings, the second has party caucus meetings and the third is the legislative assembly held at the State House with open debate of proposed legislation. Program awards include scholarships to Rhode Island College and the University of Rhode Island and books. The RI model legislature has run continuously for 50 years and is one of the oldest programs of this kind in the U.S. Several Rhode Island political leaders participated in this program as students. Grades 9-12.

375. Historical Characters: Jesse Piaia Portrays Women in History

P.O. Box 390845

Cambridge, MA 02139

Tel: 617-868-3661

Website: www.geocities.com/wih02139/jessa.html

Contact person: Jessa Piaia

Jessa Piaia presents character portrayals of diverse women which explore their contributions to U.S. history while also contrasting their domestic and public lives. The presentations examine the achievements and struggles of each woman in the context of events and issues of the day. This biographical approach has proven highly effective in giving students a realistic sense of history and in helping them to perceive some of the connections between history and the issues of today. The subjects include Mary Dyer (The Early Colonial Period); Rachel Revere and Susanna Rowson (The Revolutionary War, Federal and Early National Period); Susan B. Anthony, Clara Barton and Isabella Stewart Gardner (The Civil War Era and the Gilded Age) and Amelia Earhart (The Early 20th Century). Pre-performance curriculum packets are available for most subjects. Teachers of Rhode Island history will find the portrayal of Mary Dyer useful in introducing the motivations and beliefs of the colony's early English settlers.

8. Human Resources.

Section Contents:

College and University Resources	424-427
Other Local Resources	428-433

Introduction:

Students studying a particular topic can often gain additional knowledge through presentations by persons with expertise or special interest in a subject. Many human resources can be identified by teachers through personal social contacts. Another way to locate resource persons is through speakers bureaus sponsored by colleges, community agencies and other institutions. When arranging for a speaker to visit your school it is politic to clarify at the outset whether an honorarium is expected. The following list identifies several potential sources for locating human resources for social studies instruction.

College and University Resources

424. Community College of Rhode Island
 Knight Campus
 400 East Avenue
 Warwick, RI 02886
 Tel: 825-2142 (Vice-President for Academic Affairs)

Teachers seeking speakers on particular topics can either contact individual departments such as international studies, psychology or social sciences or contact the Vice-President for Academic Affairs whose office will try to find a person who can speak on the subject.

425. Rhode Island College
 Office of News and Public Relations
 600 Mt. Pleasant Avenue
 Providence, RI 02908
 Tel: 456-8090

Consult the Rhode Island College Experts List. 1998 Edition.

This pamphlet is available from the Office of News and Public Relations. It provides a listing of faculty by academic department with areas of expertise and telephone numbers. Teachers should inquire about willingness of individuals to speak at the K-12 level on particular topics. Social studies teachers will find potential resource persons listed in anthropology/geography; economics; history; political science; psychology; and sociology.

Human Resources

Colleges and University Resources

426. Roger Williams University
 Department of Public Relations
 One Old Ferry Road
 Bristol, RI 02809
 Tel: 254-3178

A booklet identifying topics on which faculty may be willing to speak is available. Areas of expertise include countries like Greece, religions such as Buddhism and Judaism, social concerns such as intergroup conflict, legal issues such as environmental regulation, broad subject fields like anthropology, history and political science and more specific fields such as civil rights, international relations and women's issues.

427. University of Rhode Island
 Department of Communications/News Bureau
 Kingston, RI
 Contact person: Todd McLeish
 E-mail: tmcleish@advance.uri.edu

The University News Bureau which manages a speaker's bureau is willing to assist teachers who are seeking faculty to speak on a particular topic.

Other Local Resources

428. Cultural Organizations and Museums.

Many museums and other cultural organizations have resource persons on staff or maintain speakers bureaus of individuals willing to make school presentations on specific topics. Most R.I. museums are listed in the Field Trip Section. Contact the Education or Public Relations Department of the museum for assistance. See the index under "Museums" for rapid location of entries in this guide.

429. International House of Rhode Island, Inc.
 8 Stimson Avenue
 Providence, RI 02906
 Tel: 421-7181
 Contact person: Aida Sahigian

The "World Discovery Program" maintains a list of persons from different countries living in Rhode Island who will come to schools to speak about the culture and heritage of their country. A modest fee is requested for this program.

430. Places to Go, People to See and Things to Do in Rhode Island: Educational Resource Guide. Providence: Junior League of Providence/Lippitt Hill Tutorial, 1988.

A guidebook with many speakers identified in the areas of the arts, business, community, resources, natural sciences, technology and museums. A classified subject index and geographical locator aids access.

Introduction:

Field trips are a viable curricular activity for expanding learning in support of specific instructional goals. This section offers a selection of possible field trips for social studies teaching in southeastern New England. There are 86 sites located in eastern Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island. All the sites are suitable for one day excursions with sufficient time for round-trip travel.

Information about these sites was gathered in the Summer of 2000. The data for each site includes the site name, address, telephone number for information and reservations, a brief description of the site's program or significance, grade level range and topical subjects. The sites cover many aspects of the human social experience with emphasis on past and present life in southeastern New England. Topics covered include agriculture, architecture, art history, aviation, commerce, communication, computers, culture, education, energy, exploration, fisheries, food preparation, government, health services, history, human rights, industrial history, labor history, manufacturing, mass media, military history, political history, public health, quarrying, the Revolutionary War, ships and shipbuilding, social history, sports, technology, transportation history, utilities and world wide cultures.

Some of the sites offer in-school as well as on-site visits and programming. Teachers are advised to call in advance to verify availability, times, chaperon provisions, insurance policies, handicapped access and other details pertaining to these field trip opportunities. The best practice of field trips requires careful integration into existing units of study, pre-planning of activities, pre-visit introductory lessons and post-visit activities and evaluation of learning outcomes.

- 441. Gilbert Stuart Birthplace.
815 Gilbert Stuart Road
Saunderstown, RI
Tel: 294-3001

Gilbert Stuart, the renowned portrait painter of the early U.S. republic, was born here in 1755. His father a Scottish Immigrant, made his living by grinding tobacco leaves into a powder known as snuff which was inhaled through the nose. The mill is believed to be the first snuff mill to operate in Colonial America. The son Gilbert was famous for, painting likenesses of many early U.S. leaders and citizens in an age before photography.

The home, built in 1750, features period furnishings which illustrate life in 18th century rural Rhode Island. The snuff mill provides a working example of early American industrial technology. This system used the power of gravity-fed water to turn wheels and gears linked by a drive shaft to power the movement of the grinding stones. The Hammond grist mill was built here in 1662 before Stuart arrived. Mr. Hammond, the local miller, ground grain into flour used by South County colonists to bake their daily bread.

In April and May visitors can witness the annual herring run as these fish move upstream from the ocean to spawn. Another learning resource on the grounds is the colonial herb garden where students can identify herbs and their uses. Open April to October 11.

- 443. Governor Stephen Hopkins House.
Benefit and Hopkins Streets
Providence, RI 02903
Tel: 421-0694 or 331-2134

Stephen Hopkins, born in Scituate in 1707, was raised in a Quaker family which put strong emphasis on the value of education. His grandfather's interest in mathematics inspired Hopkins to become a surveyor. Later as his earnings increased he relocated to Providence, acquired a fleet of 17 sailing ships and engaged in maritime trade; his warehouse and dock once stood at the foot of Hopkins Street. The house, built in 1707 and enlarged in 1743, originally stood across the street from the warehouse but was moved to its present location to make way for the present courthouse. An 18th century garden is maintained on the grounds.

Hopkins began his political career by serving in the R.I. legislature in 1732 and as president of the Scituate Town Council in 1735. He later served as Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas and also of the R.I. Superior Court. Hopkins was elected Governor of the Rhode Island colony ten times between 1755 and 1768.

In the Revolutionary War era Hopkins was a leader in the opposition to the Stamp Act in 1765, served in the Continental Congress from 1774 to 1776 and was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Hopkins was also a founder of the Providence Gazette and County Journal in 1762; this newspaper played an important role in increasing the political education of the colonists.

Hopkins died in 1785 just 2 years after the Peace of Paris confirmed the success of the American War of Independence from England. George Washington visited Hopkins twice at this house. Open April to December.

455. Newport Mansions.
The Preservation Society
424 Bellevue Avenue
Newport, RI 02840
Tel: 847-2251

Website: www.newportmansions.org

Hunter House, Washington Street. Built 1746. Architecture and furnishings of mid-18th century before American independence.

Kingscote. Bellevue Avenue. Built 1839. Victorian style early summer "cottage."

Chateau-Sur-Mer. Bellevue Avenue. Built 1852. This is the first of the grand mansions. A Victorian style residence with ornate Florentine carving in the dining room and library which was the home of William S. Wetmore. Wetmore made his fortune in the China trade.

The Breakers. Ochre Point Avenue. Built 1885. A renaissance style palace designed by Richard Morris Hunt for transportation magnate Cornelius Vanderbilt. The house is filled with fine European craftsmanship.

Marble House. Bellevue Avenue. Built 1892. A lavish neo-classical mansion designed by Hunt for William K. Vanderbilt and inspired by the palaces of Louis XIV at Versailles.

Chinese Tea House. East Lawn of Marble House. Built 1913. A replica of a 12th century southern Sung Chinese Temple built for Alva Vanderbilt Belmont.

The Elms. Bellevue Avenue. Built 1901. A classical 18th century French Renaissance style mansion built for coal magnate Edward J. Berwind.

Rosecliff. Bellevue Avenue. Built 1902. Another mansion inspired by palaces at Versailles. Rosecliff was designed by Stanford White for the Oelrich family with lavish interior detailing and fine craftsmanship.

Most of these mansions belong to the Gilded Age of U.S. History when favorable government regulation and lack of income taxes enabled a handful of business entrepreneurs to accumulate vast fortunes; they then invested their surplus wealth in other economic enterprises that made even more money. Some members of this class became philanthropists and contributed some of their wealth to worthy causes. Part of their fortunes were spent on building these huge mansions which were symbols of their self-ascribed status as America's aristocracy of wealth. The chateaus and palaces of European aristocracy and royalty inspired most of these designs.

456. Prescott Farm.
2009 West Main Road
Middletown, RI
Tel: 847-6230

During the American Revolution this early New England farm was the place where Richard Prescott, the British commander of occupied Newport, was captured by Rhode Island patriots on July 9, 1777. Prescott was caught while visiting a lady with whom he was romantically involved. This coup boosted the morale of the Continental Army at a time when the British forces had the upper hand in the war. The farm has a working windmill which grinds Indian corn into meal that can be purchased at a country store on the grounds. A garden provides students with an introduction to edible flowers as well as some of the culinary and medicinal herbs used in colonial times. Organic honey is also produced on the farm.

The Museum of Rhode Island History has changing exhibits on themes from R.I. History. John Brown, one of Providence's merchant princes and scion of the China trade completed this classic federal period mansion in 1788. Brown's house and its furnishings illustrate the high standards of craftsmanship in the Early American Republic and the living style of a prominent merchant-trader whose wealth was partly gained through the slave trade. The Library of Rhode Island History holds a vast collection of materials related to all aspects and periods of the state's history and the genealogy of many of its citizens. In addition to books, periodicals and manuscripts the library holds a large collection of graphics and audio-visual materials. The Museum of Work and Culture tells the story of the French Canadians who emigrated south from farms in Quebec to live and work in the factory economy of the Blackstone River valley in the 19th and 20th centuries. The website introduces current events, exhibits, publications and other resources. The Rhode Island Historical Society is developing the Heritage Harbor Museum in partnership with sixteen other museums and cultural organizations. When completed in 2002 this museum will be Rhode Island's first statewide heritage center with 22 theme exhibits, a theatre, galleries and a restaurant.

Nathan Hale, an American revolutionary war hero, was born on this farm in 1755. After education at Yale University he became a schoolmaster before being commissioned as a captain in the Continental Army in 1775 at age 20. Hale volunteered for a dangerous mission to collect information on the movements and strength of British forces around Manhattan in September of 1776. He was caught by the British while carrying this intelligence back to General George Washington's headquarters. British General William Howe had Hale hung as a spy the next day without benefit of trial. On the gallows Hale made his famous last statement: "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country." The Homestead is run by the Antiquarian and Landmarks Society, Inc.

Prudence Crandall ran an academy for young black women in this 1805 house from 1833-34. Her courageous efforts to provide education to free Blacks before the Civil War encountered political resistance due to racism which led to the school's closing. The Connecticut General Assembly had passed an infamous "Black Law" in 1833 making it illegal to found any school to educate colored persons from out-of-state. Crandall was arrested, jailed and tried under this law. The museum exhibits cover her life, women's history, and local heritage.

Site exhibits include prehistoric Wampanoag tools, a replica of a 1627 Pilgrim Trading Post, an 18th century saltworks and a 19th century railroad station. The museum is particularly useful for illustrating the 17th century trade relations between the Dutch traders, English colonists and native peoples. The English pilgrims who founded this trading post in 1627 were the first to introduce free economic enterprise in the English colonies of North America. After their seven year contract to the London Company expired, the pilgrims wrote a new contract for the Aptucxet trading post which gave them more favorable terms and full control of the business. Another economic development at this site was the transition from a barter to a monetary basis of exchange which was facilitated by the colonists' adaption of wampum, the shell currency made by native peoples, as a form of currency.

Public Libraries.	522-591
Special Libraries.	592-596
State Libraries.	597-600
School Libraries.	601
College and University Libraries.	602-608

Introduction:

Most public libraries have children's books, non-fiction books, biography, historical fiction, encyclopedias, newspapers and magazines and reference books to assist social studies students and teachers. Some libraries also have videotapes, computer software and documentary material of use in teaching civics, economics, geography and history. The CLAN system with its comprehensive on-line catalog of holdings in most R.I. public libraries provides ready access to these collections. The subjects listed below for each library refer only to special holdings related to social studies. Teachers or individual students should call libraries before making a visit to confirm hours, borrowing privileges and provisions for group visits.

School Libraries.

School libraries are a major resource for teachers of social studies. Library collection development can be facilitated through collaboration between school librarians and subject teachers. In addition teachers can improve student study skills by scheduling a general orientation on finding information and doing research using social studies resources in the school library. For a union catalog of the holdings of a selection of Rhode Island school libraries see:

601. RILINK

Rhode Island Library Information Network for Kids
Website: www.rilink.org/wx/s.dpp

RILINK is an interactive web-based catalog of school library materials found in 18 participating Rhode Island schools. The catalog has over 170,000 titles. Students and teachers can access titles through an inter-library delivery system.

Colleges and University Libraries

College collections generally hold advance level material. However, teachers will find professional books on social studies education and many resources which can serve as background literature for topics being taught. In addition there are some special collections within college libraries that are of particular use to social studies teachers.

General

611. What is the Future Problem Solving Program
 c/o Cathy Cardoza, State Director
 1 Sachem Road
 Tiverton, RI 02878
 Tel: 624-6885 E-mail: ride0817@ride.ri.net
 Website: www.fpsp.org/toc.html

In this competition student teams work with a teacher coach in three grade-level divisions to use creativity in finding solutions to anticipated future problems. Teams are rated on the basis of performance on practice problems during the school year. Those who excel are invited to the "State Bowl" in the Spring. Winning teams qualify to participate in the international FPS Conference. The primary K-3 division is non-competitive and focused on learning problem solving skills. Other opportunities exist for individual students with writing talent to compete in an essay contest expressing their images of the future. Advanced level teams can deal with real community problems. The program develops research skills, teamwork, critical and analytical thinking and oral and written communication skills.

Introduction:

Much current information about standards can be accessed on websites:

661. Developing Educational Standards (Putnam Valley Central Schools, NY) (Website address: putnamvalleyschools.org/standards.html) is a comprehensive annotated list of internet sites with K-12 educational standards and curriculum frameworks documents. Access is by state; subject; U.S. Government agencies; other countries; centers, clearinghouses and labs; state-focused groups; other organizations which includes virtually all the academic discipline-based associations for K-12 curriculum fields; and state departments of education.

662. Rhode Island Department of Elementary and Secondary Education (website: www.ridoe.net) standards are located under "Standards and Teaching" and then by clicking on the "State Frameworks" heading. Frameworks for social studies are still being developed. However, some social studies standards currently used in Rhode Island are found in:

New Standards Performance Standards. Washington, DC: National Center on the Economy and the University of Pittsburgh, 1997.

Vol.1 Elementary School

Vol.2 Middle School

Vol.3 High School

Social Studies Standards: Certificate of Initial Mastery. Providence, RI: Rhode Island Skills Commission, 1996.

SORICO Social Studies Standards Development: Social Studies Standards: June 1998. (Revised October 1999). Narragansett, RI: The Southern Rhode Island Collaborative, 1999.

Vol. I Grades K-2

Vol. IV Grades 7-8

Vol. II Grades 3-4

Vol. V Grades 9-12

Vol. III Grades 5-6

Standards developed by professional organizations in each branch of social studies (civics, economics, geography and history) can be found on the websites of the professional organizations for those fields. See chapter 13 for a list of these organizations and their websites.

The following publications provide additional information on the standards movement in social studies education.
