ABSTRACT

This federal home study textbook for naturalization candidates on the subject of state government serves as a vehicle for English language practice for the person with little or no skill in reading and should be used in conjunction with "English and State Government for the Helper (Section 3)." Each chapter contains factual information and exercises reinforcing the student's comprehension of main ideas. The twenty chapters introduce the function and structure of state governments, including the legislative, executive and judicial branches. Also described are the state government's protective and educative functions. The plan and function of city and county governments are presented as well as the means by which all governments are supported--tax dollars. A description of interaction among governments and between government and citizens is concluded by a summation of the principles of American government. A key to the mail-in exercises and a vocabulary list supplement the lessons.

Foreword

This home study material has been developed for the use of candidates for naturalization who speak English but who have little or no skill in reading. It is designed so that the man or woman unable to attend public-school classes may learn to read and write by having a limited amount of help provided by some member of his family or a neighbor.

The material was prepared under the general supervision of the Director, University Extension Division, University of Nebraska, with the aid of one State and one local public-school representative from the States of Montana and Nebraska. General direction in the development of the material was given by the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service.

A companion pamphlet entitled "English and State Government, for the Helper (Section 3)" has been prepared to assist the person who is to help the student. It should be used in conjunction with this booklet, since it supplements with necessary information the problems and work sheets herein.

Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

THE AMERICAN'S CREED

I believe in the United States of America as a Government of the People, by the People, for the People; whose Just Powers are derived from the consent of the Governed; A Democracy in a Republic; A Sovereign Nation of many Sovereign States; A Perfect Union, One and Inseparable; Established upon those Principles of Freedom, Equality, Justice, and Humanity for which American Patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes. I therefore believe it is my duty to my Country to love it; to support its Constitution; to obey its Laws; to respect its Flag; and to defend it against all enemies.

The Importance of State Governments importance because entered course left copy

We have read and talked about the plan and the work of our Federal government. We know that our Federal government helps us in many ways. What things does our Federal government do for us?

The people of the United States live under State governments as well as under a Federal government. State governments do many things for us better than the Federal government could do them.

We have learned that the Constitution of the United States is the highest law of our land. Each State also has a constitution. The first thirteen States had constitutions before the Constitution of the United States was made. The people of these States did not want the Federal government to take away the rights of the States. Because of this, all powers that were not necessary to a good Federal government were left with the States.

Before each new State entered the Union, a constitution for that State was written. It was written by men elected by the people of the State. Of course a State constitution must not go against the Constitution of the United States.

You will want to know when your State came into the Union of the United States. You may be able to see a copy of your State constitution.

The State constitution does not name all the powers of State government. But all powers that are not given to the Federal government belong to the people and to the States.

Each State constitution does these things:

1. It sets up a plan of State government.
2. It protects the rights of the people of the State. It says that the final authority belongs to the people. This means that the people have the "last word."
3. Each State constitution says how it may be amended by the people of the State.

The people of the State must approve the State constitution before it becomes law. They must say that they like it and want it to be the law of their State. They approve it by voting for it. In the United States the people rule.

LESSON 2

More About the Plans of State Governments representation property educate local county size cares

Each new State that entered the Union became equal with the other States. There are 50 States in the United States. The States are not the same size. Some States are large. Some are small. In some States there are many people. In other States there are few people. The States have equal representation in the United States Senate. Each State has two Senators.

State governments serve us in many ways. The State protects the lives and property of the people. It helps us protect our health. The State supports schools to educate its people. It cares for those in need. State money is used to build roads. Which of these things does your State do for you?

A State constitution sets up plans for local government. Local government is the government of such places as a town, a city, or a county.

Each new State had different problems. All States had to plan for the government of towns and counties. Some States had to plan for the government of large cities. The men who wrote each State constitution tried to meet the problems of government in their State.

Your study of the Federal government will help you to understand the government of your State. There are three branches of State government just as there are three branches of the Federal government. Can you name the three branches? Try to do so now.

You know that the legislative branch makes the laws, the executive branch enforces the laws, and the judicial branch explains the laws. In the next lesson we shall study how the three branches work together in our State governments.

LESSON 3

The State Legislature

assembly Nebraska depends teacher capital governor correspondence legislators

The lawmaking branch of State government is the State legislature or assembly. The State legislature is made up of two groups or houses in every State but Nebraska. In most States the two houses are the senate and the house of representatives.

Members of the two houses are usually called senators and representatives. In some States they are called legislators or assemblymen. In most States the senators are elected for four-year terms, and the representatives are elected for two-year terms. How long are their terms in your State?

The people of the State elect members of the State legislature. We want to elect good lawmakers. A good citizen talks with other people about the men who may be elected to office. He tries to use the newspapers, radio, and television to know about them. The people can help to get good laws by voting carefully for their lawmakers.

We have men from our part of the State to represent us in the State legislature. Each State is divided into districts. Usually there are two sets of districts. One is for the election of senators. Another is for the election of representatives. A few States have only one set of districts. The number of representatives from a district depends on the number of people in the district. They usually elect more representatives than senators from each district because the house of representatives in each State has more members than the senate.

The two houses of the legislature meet in the capital of the State. What city in your State is the capital?

In most States the legislature meets once every two years. The governor may call a special meeting of the State legislature if it is necessary. You will want to learn about the lawmaking group in your own State. Your Correspondence Teacher will help you. You can also learn more about the legislative branch of the government by talking with your helper.

LESSON 4

Lawmaking in a State

propose steps approval

Do you remember how a bill becomes a law in the Congress of the United States? Laws are made in about the same way in the State legislatures.

Any State senator or representative may propose or start a bill that he believes should be made a law. A senator brings his bill before the State senate. A representative proposes bills to the house of representatives.

Each bill is sent to a committee. An important bill is often given a public hearing before the committee. Persons who are interested may speak for or against the bill.

The committee may not think the bill would be a good law. They may not report to the house, and the bill usually will not then be voted upon.

If the committee decides the bill would be a good law, they report to their house. They say why they think the bill should be made a law. The bill may have changes or amendments made by the committee or by direct vote of the members of the house.

Then members of the house vote for or against the bill. If a majority of the members vote for the bill, it is sent to the other house of the State legislature. There the bill goes through the same steps as it did in the first house.

When both houses have voted to make the bill a law, it is sent to the governor of the State. If he signs it, the bill becomes a law.

The governor may not think the bill will be a good law. If he does not sign the bill, he may stop it from becoming a law. This power of the governor to keep a bill from becoming a law is his power of veto.

In most States the members of the legislature have a right to pass a law over the governor's veto. To do this, a majority, or in many States, two-thirds of the members of both houses, must vote to pass the bill without the governor's approval.

SOMETHING TO DO FOR LESSON 4

Directions:

The sentences below name the steps in making a bill into a law. The sentences are not in the right order.

You know that a bill can start in the senate or in the house of representatives. For this lesson, we will say that the bill started in the house of representatives. Look at sentence 4. It says how the bill began. Write sentence 4 on the first line.

Which step comes next? Write it on the lines. Try to place the sentences in the right order.

1. The bill is sent to a committee.
2. The members of the house of representatives vote on the bill.
3. The governor signs the bill.
4. The bill is proposed by a representative.
5. The bill goes to the senate.
6. The bill may be changed or amended by the house committee.
7. The bill goes through the same steps in the senate as it did in the house of representatives.

PART 2

control initiative referendum enough petition statement destroy stop

Citizens elect their lawmakers. But the people also have direct control over lawmaking in about half of the States. The two ways they have to control lawmaking directly are the initiative and the referendum.

The initiative gives the people the power to start a law. Let us say that the people in your State have the powers of initiative and referendum. You or some of your neighbors think that a certain law is needed for the good of the people. The law has not been passed by your State legislature. Let us see how the law may be started.

When you are a citizen, you may start a petition for a law that you wish passed. The petition is a paper that makes a statement of the proposed law. It says that the people want the law to be voted upon.

Persons who want the law sign their names to the petition. If a large enough number of the voters sign it, the proposed law must be voted upon by one of two groups, the State legislature or the people themselves. It may become a law.

The referendum gives the people the power to stop a law. The people may not like a law that has been passed by the State legislature. If enough people sign a petition, the voters vote on the law. They may vote to keep or to destroy it.

Good citizens know about the powers of initiative and referendum. If their State gives the people these powers, the citizens may use them to help have good laws in the State.

Do the people in your State have the powers of initiative and referendum? Do you think it is a good thing for the people to have these powers? Do you know why we say the people rule in the United States?

LESSON 5

The Governor as Head of the Executive Branch of the State Government

The governor signs bills passed by the State legislature

It is important that the people obey their laws. Do you remember which branch of the State government enforces the laws? Each State constitution says how the executive branch shall be organized.

The governor is the head of the executive branch of the State government. His place in the State government is much like that of the President in the Federal government.

The governor is elected by the people of the State. The State constitution says what his term of office and his powers shall be. Who is the governor of your State? You will want to know how often the governor is elected in your State and what some of his powers are. Some of the powers of the governors in most States are given here.

The governor tells the State legislature what laws he thinks are needed. You have learned that the governor may veto laws that are passed by the State legislature. He may call special sessions of the legislature.

The governor's most important duty is to carry out the laws of the State. Members of many boards and commissions are appointed by the governor to help carry out the laws.

The governor must have other officers to help him. The State constitution says whether these officers shall be elected by the people or appointed by the governor.

In some States the governor is given a good deal of control over other State officers. In other States he does not have much control over them. It is a good thing for the people of the State if the governor has enough control over the other State officers to see that they work together well.

In our next lesson we shall learn about the work of the different State officers.

LESSON 6

Officers Who Help the Governor

lieutenant governor auditor treasurer records fees superintendent of public instruction

In every State the governor has persons who help do the work of the executive department. Some of these people are appointed by him. Others are elected by the people.

Most States have a lieutenant governor who is elected by the people. Sometimes the governor is not able to serve all of his term of office. Then the lieutenant governor takes the place of the governor. The lieutenant governor serves as the leader of the State senate.

The secretary of state keeps the records of the State. He has State laws printed. He helps carry out elections in the State.

The attorney general is the chief lawyer of the State. He advises the governor and other State officials about the State laws. He represents the State in the courts and in some States gives help to county law officers.

The auditor looks at the public bills of the State. If the bills are right, he asks the treasurer to pay them. The auditor looks also at the records of county and city officers who take in money for the State to be sure that they are right.

The treasurer takes care of fees and tax money that come to the State. He pays all the bills of the State.

The superintendent of public instruction works with the schools of the State. He helps them to have better programs of education. He sees that the State school laws are enforced.

Do you know the names of the people who hold any of these offices in your State? In most of the States these officers are elected by the people. In some States other executive officers are elected. When you are a voting citizen, you will want to help elect good officers.

LESSON 7

The Judicial Branch of State Government

State supreme court and library, Cheyenne, Wyo.

punish superior center thankful special

You have learned how the State legislature makes the laws. You know that the laws are enforced by the governor and other State officers.

In good government, the people understand, as well as obey, their laws. The judicial branch of our government explains the laws. Our courts give us equal rights and a fair way to settle our differences. They punish people who break the law.

We need courts that we can go to easily. Courts in small towns and cities, as well as the rural areas, are referred to as local courts. They are the lowest courts. We may take our small cases to these courts. They are courts of limited jurisdiction. They handle civil cases involving small amounts, traffic matters, police matters, and the like.

More important cases are taken to a higher court. These are general trial courts. They are often called county courts, although some States have a trial court for two or more counties. These courts are named circuit, district, common pleas, or superior courts. In your State the county or trial court could be called by any of these names. Nearly all the important civil and criminal cases in the State are started in these courts.

A person may think that his case was not settled fairly in the local court or in the county court. He sometimes has a right to take the case to a higher State court. The highest court in the State is usually called the supreme court.

The supreme court is the head of the judicial branch of the State government. You will remember that the men on the Supreme Court of the United States are appointed by the President. They serve during good behavior. The members of the State supreme court are usually elected by the people of the State. Their terms may not be for life. How long is their term in your State?

The head of the State supreme court is called the chief justice. The number of men on the supreme court is not the same in all States. You will want to know how many justices serve on this court in your State.

Sessions of the supreme court are held at the State capital, and sometimes in other large cities.

In some States there are special courts. They may hear children's cases or certain other special cases, such as domestic relations and estates.

The courts need our help in doing their work. Good citizens obey the laws. They help other people to obey them. If people cannot agree, they should use the courts to settle their differences. They should do what the courts decide is right.

Courts are for the good of all of the people. In the United States all people have equal rights. Our rights will be protected in the courts. We can be thankful that we live in a land that protects our rights.

In our next lesson we shall read more about the work of State courts.

LESSON 8

The Work of the Courts

A jury

built costs criminal windows punishment broken empty protection presides honest

Two kinds of cases come to the State courts most often.

In a civil case two or more people cannot agree about something. They ask the court to help them settle it. The story of John Jones will tell you about a civil case.

John Jones had moved to a new town. It was a town that was growing larger. John had worked hard and saved money. John wanted to build a new home.

John and his wife bought a piece of land in a new part of town. Their house was built there. They liked their home. They made a large garden next to the house.

When the vegetables were just right to eat, a new family bought the piece of land next to John's land. One day the new neighbor came to see John. He told John that part of John's garden was on his land. John was sure that he had bought all of the land that was in his garden. He did not want to give up the land.

The neighbor took his case to the court. He sued John. The court decided that the neighbor was right. John had made part of his garden on land that was not his land. He had to give up part of his garden. He had to pay some costs, because he had not understood the rights of his neighbor.

The other kind of case is a criminal case. In this kind of case, a person breaks a law that protects the people.

Joe had also brought a home. It was not a new house, but no one had lived in it for some time. Some of the windows had been broken. But Joe knew that he could make the house into a good home for his family.

Each day on his way home, Joe passed a house where no one lived. He saw that the windows in this house would fit those in his home. Joe was sure that someone would break these windows just as they had broken the windows in his house.

One day Joe took the windows out of the empty house. They were just right for his home.

A neighbor had seen Joe take the windows. In a few days, Joe was taken to court. He was told that he had taken another person's property. He had broken a law that protects the public.

Joe might want to settle this case without a trial by doing what the court said he must. But he would have to be given a jury trial if he asked for it. That is one of his rights.

Can you think of a criminal case? Remember that the people are promised protection of their life and property.

A great many cases come to trial by the court. We want to know something about how the court carries on its work.

You have learned that a judge presides over the business of the court. He keeps order during a trial. If the jury decides that the person on trial is guilty, it is the duty of the judge to say what the punishment shall be.

Judges are usually elected by the people, but they may be appointed by the governor or by the State legislature. A good citizen will try to know something about the men who want to be judges. He will vote for men who are honest and fair.

You know that a jury decides whether a person on trial is guilty or not. A good citizen tries to decide a case in the right way if he serves on a jury. When you are a citizen you may be called to be a jury member.

The State Protects the Lives, Property, and Health of Its People

police license disease drugs hospitals doctors pure sick

You have read that the States have laws that protect the lives and property of the people. Each State has a group of men called State police to help local officers enforce the laws if necessary. The governor can send these men to any part of the State where they are needed.

Our State governments protect the health of their people. This is an important duty. Many people need to learn more about taking care of their health. The State Department of Health helps them learn how to do this.

Our State governments want to be sure that doctors and certain other people are prepared to do their work well. State laws say that these people must have a license. They must pass an examination before they are given a license to work in the State.

State constitutions usually give State officials the right to look at all places where people work. These places must be safe. They must not be bad for the workers' health.

State officers try to see that our foods and drugs are fresh and pure. They try to prevent disease.

The State builds hospitals for people who need special care. Some of these hospitals are for those who cannot see or hear. Some are for people with certain diseases. Some are for those who are mentally ill. Does your State have State hospitals? Where are they?

State officers examine school children and help to protect their health. Do you think it is a good thing for our government to help keep our children healthy? If children learn to take care of their health, we may some day have fewer sick people in our land.

Education is necessary to make good citizens in a democracy. We need to know how other people live. We must respect the rights of others. We want to be able to help choose good leaders and lawmakers.

Our government wants to help its people become good citizens. The public schools belong to all the people. Tax money pays for these schools.

Public schools are provided through State and local governments

Most of our schools are for the use of children. State laws say that children who are able must go to school. The State Department of Public Instruction decides some of the things that should be studied by children. It may choose some of the books that are to be used in the schools of the State.

The States may give State money to poor communities so that they can have good schools also. We want all children to have a chance for a good education.

Our States build schools of higher learning, such as colleges. Some colleges train teachers for the public schools. Others help young people get ready for special work. Your helper can tell you where some of these State schools are in your State. Are there young people in your community who go to them?

Sometimes the States provide special schools where men and women may go to learn how to do their work better. They learn how to do new things. The meetings may be held at night. Often these schools show people ways to play as well as to work. Schools want to help people to be healthy.

State Governments Provide for Public Improvements and Regulate Business cars world drive regulate speed limit companies light

You know that State governments protect the health, lives, and property of their people. They help educate them to live in a democracy. They care for those who need special help. Our government can do these things better than we could do them for ourselves.

It does all these things for us with public money. We want our government to use our tax money to protect and serve us.

This lesson will tell us about other public services that our government provides for us.

Many people in the United States own cars. We need many good roads. Most of our States have worked hard to build good roads. Our country has some of the best roads in the world.

Counties and townships cannot build the good roads that people want without help. Local, State, and Federal governments work together to build them.

The State helps build and keep up county and township roads. It pays for State roads. There are some roads that go through many States. They are called United States highways. Some are also called Interstate highways. The States work with the Federal government to provide these United States highways and Interstate highways. Can you think of a county, a State, an Interstate, and a United States highway in or near your community?

The State laws say that a car owner must have a license. They usually say that one who drives must have a driver's license.

State laws often regulate the speed limit for cars. Such laws help to protect the lives and property of the people.

Companies that provide light, water, and other public services usually have to be given authority by the State to serve the people. The State may make certain rules about how the companies must carry on their business. These rules protect the people who use the services of the companies.

LESSON 13

The Plan of County Government

A county courthouse

seat commissioners courthouse townships manager sheriff

We have learned how our Federal and State governments serve us. You may remember that State constitutions set up a plan for local governments also. Local government is government of towns and cities, townships and counties.

In most States the county is the most important local government. County governments help State governments carry out laws, but they do not have much legislative power.

In each county there is one town that is the center of government. It is called the county seat. County officers have their offices at the county seat. The offices are in a building called the county courthouse.

Which town is your county seat? Have you seen your county courthouse?
Can you tell what business is done at the courthouse?

In the county courthouse there is a court that protects the rights of the people. The officers needed to carry on court business are there. Our government wants the courts near to the people so that the people can use them. Do you remember what kind of court holds its terms at the county seat?

A board of commissioners often is at the head of county government. There are usually three or more members on the board of county commissioners. The members of this board are elected by the people of the county.

Certain county officers help the board of commissioners to do its work. Often these county officers are elected by the voters. They are sometimes appointed by the county board, by the governor, or by the State legislature.

The sheriff enforces the laws in the county. The county attorney serves the people by bringing accused persons to trial. Other officers collect tax money and pay county bills. Some officers keep court and county records. In most counties there is a county superintendent of schools who looks after the schools of the county.

Some counties have changed their form of local government. In these cases, one man is usually made the manager of county business. Fewer officers are needed. You will want to know the plan of local government that is used in your county.

How County Governments Serve Us

supervise birth deaths marriages deeds jail

You have read about a few of the things that county governments do for us. You may have used other services that you did not know were county services. Here are some of them.

1. The county carries on local elections. It helps in State and National elections.
2. The county has courts. We may use the courts to keep our rights and to settle differences.
3. The county decides how much money is needed to give us the services we want. It collects taxes to pay for county government.
4. The county pays a person to supervise the schools of the county.
5. Some counties keep records of births, deaths, and marriages of their people.
6. The county keeps copies of important business papers for the people. It keeps a record of deeds to property.
7. The county usually cares for its own poor people, for some old people, and for others who need special help.
8. The county tries to protect its people from diseases. Sometimes it builds a county hospital to take care of sick people who cannot pay for care.
9. The county builds and keeps up a courthouse, a jail, and other public buildings.
10. The county can give certain kinds of licenses.
11. The county takes care of local roads. It has some State help to do this.

LESSON 15

How Our City Governments Are Organized

A city council in session

close purpose council mayor

All of the people of the United States live under State and Federal government. Many persons live on farms, but most of the people live under city government. When great numbers of people live close together, they must have a government that gives them peace and safety.

The purpose of our city government is the same as the purpose of our State and Federal governments. What do you think is the purpose of good government? It is to protect and serve all its people in the best way.

City governments can make laws as well as enforce them. City laws must not take away the rights of the people. They must not go against State or Federal laws.

Three kinds of city government are used in our country. As you read, try to decide which form is used in the city or town where you live, or in a town that is near to your home.

In many cities the people elect a group of persons to care for city business. This group is usually called the council. It may make city laws. The people choose one man as head of their city government. He is the mayor. He enforces city laws. City work is divided into departments. An important officer is at the head of each department. These officers work with the mayor. This is the mayor-council form of government.

In other cities the voters elect a small group of officers who are called the commission. The commission makes city laws. It also enforces them. The commission plan is a little different from the other forms of city government. Under this plan, one man usually does not have more powers than the other members. Each member of the commission is the head of one or more departments.

Another form of city government is the city-manager plan. The people elect a small council. The council may make city laws. They appoint a man to carry out the laws and to serve as the head of their city government. He is usually called the city manager. He appoints the heads of different departments. They work with him and the council.

You have read that the purpose of city government is the same as that of our State and Federal governments. City government is like State and Federal government in another way. It is government in which the people have the final authority.

Let us remember that our officers are given their powers when we elect them. We may take their power away if they do not use it well.

LESSON 17

How We Pay for Our Governments

spread price indirect grocer budget

We have read about many things that Federal, State, and local governments do for us. If a city did not have these government services what would it be like?

The water might not be pure. Milk and other foods might not be safe to use. The streets would not be clean. There would be no police to protect the people and their property. Disease would spread. Would you like to live in a city like this?

We want the services that our government gives to us. We are willing to pay for these services. If we buy food or need a doctor's care, we will pay our bills. We must also pay our public bills. Most of the money for government services is paid as taxes. There are many different kinds of taxes.

Our Federal government gets a large part of its tax money from income taxes. A person's income is the money he receives, and includes money from the work he does, from interest and dividends, and rents he receives from property he owns. Not all people pay equal income taxes. Persons who make more money must pay larger income taxes. Many States also get money from income taxes. Have you paid this kind of tax?

The Federal government and some State governments tax property left to others at the death of the owner. A tax is usually placed on large gifts of money or property that people make to one another.

State and local governments get a large part of their money from property taxes. This is a tax on buildings and other things that we own. The Federal government does not use a direct property tax.

Taxes are placed on many kinds of business. Some States say that companies must have licenses to do business in the State. The money from different kinds of licenses is used by State and local governments.

Not all people pay direct taxes. Some persons may not need to pay a tax on income, property, or a business. But every person pays taxes in some way. When he buys food, he is helping to pay the grocer's taxes. The grocer must add his taxes to the price of the things he sells. In the same way taxes are added to the price of many other things. Such taxes are called indirect taxes.

The leaders of our Federal, State, and local governments must decide how much money will be needed each year. Each government group must make a plan.

It is called a budget. The elected representatives of the people must approve the budget. They say how much money our governments may collect and spend.

Tax money is our money. A good citizen knows about the different kinds of taxes. He knows how this tax money is used.

LESSON 18

How Our Governments Work Together

wonder acts cooperate treated enemies

You have read of three kinds of government in our United States. They are the Federal government, the State government, and the local government. Do you wonder how a nation can be strong under a divided government?

Our Federal, State, and local governments have given us good service for two reasons.

1. They have the same purpose. Do you remember that the purpose of good government is to serve and protect the people?

2. Our three governments work together. In the United States we know that many people must cooperate to do any great work. When we work together, our nation is strong.

Let us see how our governments work together. Our Federal government does things that must be done to keep our many States one Union. It protects us from foreign enemies. It gives all the States equal rights and equal authority. It has a Supreme Court to settle differences fairly. It can keep a few men from getting too much power.

Our Federal government does not try to give us certain services in a direct way. It helps the State to give us such things as good roads and better ways to farm. It helps the States protect their natural riches.

The States do some things for our Federal government. They elect persons to serve in the Congress of the United States. Three-fourths of the States must approve any amendment to the Federal Constitution. State police power may be used by the nation if necessary.

State governments must work together. Each State must respect the acts of another State. The laws of a State can be enforced only in that State. A person may move into a different State. He must be treated in the same way as other people in that State.

It is good for States to trade. No State can place special taxes on things from other States. The States cooperate to make the living conditions of their people better.

The States help our local governments. They help protect the health of people in cities and in the country. State courts are for the use of all people.

The counties, towns, and cities help enforce State laws. They collect taxes for the State and help in the election of State officers.

Government groups help each other. It is important to remember that one government group can also keep another group from becoming too strong. Can you see how this power protects the rights of the people?

Our government groups are our own groups. Good citizens make a good government.

How Our Government Groups Work With Citizens

The government protects our health

Government officers are elected by the people to meet public needs. Good officers want to know the needs of the people. They want to serve us in the best way.

We have many ways to tell our elected representatives our needs and wishes. We may write to them. We may talk to them. Good lawmakers respect the wishes of the people they serve.

We often meet and work with public officers who enforce or carry out the laws. Some of them are police officers, but many are postmen and other officers who give us special services.

You have read that our government pays certain persons to protect the health of the people. It tries to prevent disease. The people may learn from these groups how to improve their health.

Government officers try to improve working conditions. They help to settle labor disputes.

Government groups work with farmers in an important way. Plants and animals have been improved. The soil is being used more wisely. The government tries to have a good market for farm crops. Farmers should know about and use these services of our government.

Most people deal with a bank in some way. Our government controls banks so that our money is safe.

Many persons are in the business of carrying people and goods. When the government works with these persons, it is helping to protect the lives and property of the people that use the service.

Government groups can help businessmen by giving them information that they need to know in their business.

It is good that our government works closely with its citizens. The government belongs to us. Good citizens cooperate with both State and Federal government.

LESSON 20

Principles of Our Government principles balances system independent delegated

You have studied the plan of our government carefully. When the leaders of this nation planned our government, many people did not think the plan would work. You know that it has worked.

Our government groups are organized and do their work using certain principles. Principles are the most important ideas of any plan. A good citizen knows the principles of our government. They help him to understand his rights and duties under our laws.

These are the important principles of our government that you have studied in your earlier lessons.

The Principle of Representative Government

We govern ourselves through representatives that we elect. We vote for Senators and Representatives to make our laws in the Congress of the United States. We elect our President and Vice President. In every State, the people choose State, county, city, and town officers. If elected officers do not do their work as the people wish, the voters may not elect them again. The people have the final authority.

In the United States no vote is any more important than any other vote. The votes of all people are equal.

The Principle of Federal System

Our Constitution divided the powers of government between the nation and the States. This plan of two governments that work together is the Federal system.

In the United States we have one Federal government that is strong enough to rule the nation, and State governments that are near enough to the people to know their needs.

The Federal system has worked well because each government has different authority or powers. Certain other powers can be used only by the people.

The Principle of Delegated Powers

Delegated powers are powers that are given by the people to their governments. Some powers were given to the Federal government. Other powers were given to the States.

The important thing to remember is that all power really belongs to the people. They delegate only such powers to their governments as they want to give.

The Principle of Divided Authority

You remember well the three branches of our Federal government. The Congress, or Legislative Branch, makes laws. The Executive Branch enforces them. The Judicial Branch explains our laws.

Our State governments also have three branches. The plan is a good one.

The Principle of "Checks and Balances"

No branch of our government has complete power. The two Houses of Congress check each other. The President, as head of the Executive Branch, can veto a law passed by Congress. The Congress also has a check on the President. It can pass a bill over his veto.

The Supreme Court may say that a bill passed by the Congress and approved by the President goes against the Constitution. Then it does not have to be obeyed.

The President may appoint persons to certain offices. But his appointments must be approved by the Senate. The same plan is found in almost every State government.

Can you tell why the principle of checks and balances is a good one?

The Principle of Independent Courts

Our courts want to give all people justice under the law. The judges of most Federal courts are appointed to serve during good behavior. A judge should do what he believes is fair. He need not be afraid of those who make or enforce the laws.

The Principle of Supremacy of the Law

The Constitution and the laws made by its authority are the highest laws of our country. Every person must obey the laws. The rights of every person will be protected by our laws.

The Principle of Freedom and Equality

The people of the United States have much freedom. But we must not deny that freedom to our neighbor. It is our right to take part in our Government. But we must also respect the rights of other people.

The Principle That Rights of the People Must Be Protected

How many of the rights named in the Bill of Rights do you remember? Those rights are important. Our government protects them.

The Principle That Our Constitution Is a Living Law

The needs of people change. Our Constitution can be changed to meet those needs. It has been changed when necessary. When we change our Constitution, we do it as the law says we must. We do it peacefully.

The Principle of Government by and for the People

We have seen that the people of the United States are the rulers. They are the government.

We have also seen that our government serves all people equally. It is a government for the good of its people as well as a government by the people.

Do you agree that these principles have made a good plan of government in our land?

These principles work only as well as the people make them work. As good citizens we vote at each election because that is the way the people are represented in government. We make use of checks that are necessary to keep any one group from becoming too strong. We obey the laws because we believe in the supremacy of law. We respect the rights of our neighbors because we believe in the equality of men. Remember that in this nation the people are the government.
