ABSTRACT

Delaware's standards for modern language curriculum content in public schools are provided for teachers' use in coordinating instruction. Teachers are encouraged to use communicative, student-centered classroom activities and to reinforce and expand the material in successive instructional units. The guide consists of introductory sections on the philosophy and use of the standards. Subsequent sections outline non-language-specific content for four instructional levels. For each content area, behavioral objectives and relevant vocabulary and linguistic structures are noted. Level I topics include greetings and leave-taking, geography and culture, communicating about oneself and peers, family and home, school, weather, telling time, leisure time, shopping and related subjects, food and restaurants, travel and transportation, obtaining lodging, using telephones, and the human body. Level II topics include travel, obtaining services for help, daily routines and physical well-being, family, recreation and leisure time, and work. Topics at level III include the geography and culture of the target language, cultural interdependence, media, birthday observations, famous places to visit, meeting personal needs, summer employment, history and politics, fine arts, and composers. Level IV topics include current events, literary texts, target country history, and resolving more complex situations. (MSE)

SUPERINTENDENT'S MESSAGE

The format of these standards is in response to the 1979 Report of the President's Commission on Foreign Languages and International Studies (Strength Through Wisdom, 1979), which reemphasizes the importance of foreign languages to the nation's economic, political and strategic health. I fully support the Council of Chief State School Officers' position advocating the study of foreign languages and other cultures (International Dimensions of Education -- Position Paper and Recommendations for Action, November 1985, Council of Chief State School Officers). I also endorse the National Association of Elementary School Principals' (NAESP) recommendation to include foreign language study in the elementary school curriculum (1987). In addition, I am in total agreement with the College Board's conclusion that ". . . foreign language study is both intimately connected to the Basic Academic Competencies and a unique subject in its own right." (Academic Preparation in Foreign Languages, 1986).

These standards serve the function of assisting school districts to provide for quality foreign language programs throughout our State. They are intended primarily to serve as a base for curriculum in an effort to foster the goal of equal educational opportunity in Delaware public schools.

Dr. William B. Keene
State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

FOREWARD

These modern foreign language content standards are the result of work begun in June of 1987, fulfilling the State Board of Education directive to prepare program and compliance standards for equal educational opportunities in all required and various elective subject areas.

These standards reflect the collaborative efforts of a committee of teachers from the majority of Delaware Public School districts, representing all modern foreign languages taught in the State. Nancy Anderson of Educational Testing Service served as a consultant at the initial workshop. Input was also provided by the University of Delaware's Department of Languages and Literatures and the Department of Linguistics. The committee is most grateful to the Indiana Department of Education for permission to adopt and/or adapt many of the ideas and activities presented in A Guide to Proficiency-Based Instruction In Modern Foreign Languages for Indiana Schools (1986).

Funding for this project was made available through a grant from the Professional Development Division of the Department of Public Instruction and through Title II of the Education for Economic Security Act.

PHILOSOPHY

In view of the importance of foreign language instruction to the nation's economic, political and security needs and the many other personal benefits to be accrued by its study, the Department of Public Instruction recommends that all Delaware students have the opportunity to learn a language other than English.

The goal of foreign language study is to prepare young people to become culturally sensitive and communicatively competent students, travelers and/or workers in other societies and cultures in the world. At the same time, it is hoped that foreign language study will help students interact positively and more effectively with native speakers of the languages in this country. Finally, it is also hoped that, as a result of foreign language study, the students will become more enlightened and productive citizens in the global community.

USING THE CONTENT STANDARDS (To The Teacher)

The goals stated in the philosophy can best be achieved by means of a communicative approach. The concept of communicative-based content standards is not new. Teachers will find that there is much more that is familiar than unfamiliar. This should become evident upon a thorough examination of all levels of the content standards.

In order for students to successfully communicate in a foreign language, it is necessary for them to engage in tasks and activities which will promote these skills. Communication, then, should not only be a major program objective but also the dominant activity of the classroom. It follows, then, that the classroom is no longer teacher-centered but student-centered.

The student should participate in activities which promote the four skills (listening, speaking, reading and writing) in cultural contexts and situations. The teaching of grammar should be reinforced by means of functional, pragmatic and communicative activities. These standards deemphasize the "formal grammar lesson," particularly at the lower levels, providing more opportunity for active and meaningful use of language.

Material presented in specific units should be continuously and consistently reinforced and expanded in successive units. Although not specifically stated for Levels III and IV, linguistic content should correlate with each topic. At this point, using the same format, local school districts may develop standards for higher levels of language instruction. Note that the levels are not grade specific but may even begin as early as fourth grade. For example, the content of Level I is appropriate for the following grades: four through six, seven through eight, and nine, ten, eleven or twelve.

Completion of at least 80% of these standards for each level is recommended as a minimum requirement. These generic content standards should serve as guidelines. This volume does not address the practical problems of relating syllabus construction to matters of textbooks, teachers' abilities and orientation, nor does the sequencing of topics correspond to any given textbook. Local school districts are responsible for developing language specific curriculum guides. As an ongoing project, the content standards committee plans to develop language specific materials to complement these standards.
