ABSTRACT

This guide aims to assist the faculty member who wishes to integrate Native American materials into core courses of the curriculum. The first section is a bibliography of over 350 entries, primarily books and journal articles, arranged in the following categories: Native American bibliographies and general sources, history, economics, spirituality, music and dance, art, education, politics, and women. Other sections of the guide contain the following: (1) a list of approximately 80 films and videos on Native Americans, as well as sources for films, videos, slides, and photographs; (2) addresses for tribal councils; (3) course outlines, syllabi, and resources for a core course in political science that integrates Native American materials, as well as courses on California's Native Americans, Plains Indian culture, American Indian belief systems, American Indian education, the contemporary American Indian, and American Indian culture; (4) addresses and brief descriptions of 45 Native American groups and associations and related institutions; (5) federal government agencies concerned with Native Americans; (6) a list of 35 Native American periodicals; and (7) national museums with Native American materials. NATIVE AMERICAN
CURRICULUM RESOURCE GUIDE

Dr. Melanie McCoy
Editor and Compiler

The purpose of this guide is to assist the faculty member who wishes to integrate Native American materials into core courses in the curriculum. The guide can also be of assistance to faculty members and students who wish to do scholarly research in this field. The guide is seen as a beginning, not as an end. The American Association for the Advancement of Core Curriculum requests that those who use the guide share their input with the Association on how the guide could be revised, improved, and made more useful to faculty members. The guide contains the following sections:

Images of Indians--A Series. Producers: Robert Hagopian and Phil Lucas for KCTS/9, Seattle. Narrator: Will Sampson. The first Western movie was produced in 1913. Since then, over 200 "cowboy and Indian" films have been made, and almost without exception, they have portrayed the Native American as strange and quaint and either more or less than human. Images of Indians is a five-part series which examines the stereotypes drawn by the movies and questions what the effect of the Hollywood images has been on the Indians' own self-image.

Indian Arts at the Phoenix Heard Museum--A Series. 1975. Produced by: KAET-TV. The Heard Museum in Phoenix contains an extensive collection of Southwest Native American artifacts which this series incorporates in its six programs. This series explores six major areas of Native American art: basketry, painting, pottery, textiles, silversmithing, and Kachina doll sculpting.

In the White Man's Image. Length: 51:22. 1991. Produced by: Native American Public Broadcasting Consortium and Nebraska

Educational Television. In 1875, Captain Richard Pratt escorted 72 Indian warriors suspected of murdering white settlers to Fort Marion in St. Augustine, Florida. Once there, Pratt began an ambitious experiment which involved teaching the Indians to read and write English, putting them in uniforms, and drilling them like soldiers, "Kill the Indian and save the man," was Pratt's motto.

I Will Fight No More Forever. Length: 10:00. This video, told in illustrations, narrates the war between Chief Joseph and the Nez Perce and Colonel Gibbons and his army men.

John Kim Bell. Length: 36:33. 1983. Produced by: Anthony Azzopardi. This program tells the story of a talented and passionate young man who has broken through social barriers and stepped into the limelight. At the age of 31, John Kim Bell is the first Native American Indian pursuing a career as a symphonic conductor.

Journey to the Sky: A History of the Alabama Coushatta Indians. Length: 52:44. 1980. Produced by: KUHT Film Productions. "Journey to the Sky" is a folktale of the Alabama Coushatta Indians. Alabama Chief Fulton Battise sits before a campfire in a moonlit wood and relates in his native dialect the fantasy tale of three youths traveling to the ends of the earth and beyond. The story weaves in and out of the film's narrative segments, and serves as a metaphor for the history of the tribe.

Keep Your Heart Strong. Length: 58:09. 1986. Deb Wallwork, Prairie Public Television. An hour-long documentary which gives an inside view of contemporary Native American culture in its most accessible and popular form--the Pow Wow.

Legacy in Limbo. Length: 60:00. 1990. Produced by: WXXI-TV. The Museum of the American Indian in New York City is by far the world's greatest collection of Native American artifacts in the world. Yet only a small portion of the more than one million artifacts in the Museum collection, are on public display.

Live and Remember. Length: 28:54. Henry Smith, Solaris/Lakota Project. A documentary about the Lakota Sioux nation's oral tradition, song and dance, medicine and the spirit world, and perceptions of bicultural lifestyle, discussed by Lakota elders, medicine men, and traditional dancers.

Man of Lightning. Length: 28:30. 1982. Produced by: Gary Moss for Georgia State University. "Man of Lightning," based on two Cherokee Indian legends, is an exciting drama of the long-vanished world of the Cherokee in the years before European contact.

Menominee. Length: 58:50. 1974. Produced by: Educational Communications, University of Wisconsin-Green Bay. This documentary examines the historical development of the many social and political problems faced by the Menominee Indians of northwestern Wisconsin.

Minorities in Agriculture: The Winnebago. Length: 28:30. 1984. Produced by: Ralph A. Swain, Briar Cliff College. This documentary highlights the economic development programs of the Winnebago tribe of Nebraska. It begins with a brief history of the tribe and moves to a description of their food self-sufficiency program.

Mother Corn. Length: 28:46. 1977. Produced by: KBYU-TV. Because corn is so sacred to the Hopi, they call it "Mother." Corn is the staple of the Hopi and Pueblo diet and is also a religious symbol of the life plan in the Native religion.

Nations Within a Nation. Length: 58:30. Produced by: Department of Sociology--Oklahoma State University. Sovereignty has come to mean many things to Native American communities: the right to self government; the right to provide services to tribal members; the right to generate income for tribal programs and activities; the right to plan and direct economic development on tribal lands; and the right to maintain the traditional activities of the community. This program examines the historical, legal and social backgrounds of this issue.

Navajo. Length: 29:00. 1979. Produced by: KBYU-TV. In "Navajo," two youngsters leave their modern way of life behind to learn the ways of their traditional Navajo grandparents on a visit to the Navajo Reservation.

The New Pequot: A Tribal Portrait. Length: 60:00. Produced by: Connecticut Public Television. The New Pequot: A Tribal Portrait is a documentary that explores the history and future of Connecticut's Mashantucket Pequot Indians.

Nez Perce--Portrait of a People. Length: 23:00. Produced by: Phil Lucas. Nez Perce--Portrait of a People, documents the history of the Nez Perce people through the early beginnings of peaceful interaction with the white expeditioners Louis and Clark, the learning of Christianity by some Nez Perce, leading to a division between the two spiritual philosophies, to the Treaty of 1855 and with the 1860 gold rush to the northwestern United States, the eventual takeover of more than 90% of Nez Perce lands by the whites.

Ni'bthaska of the Umonhon--A Series. 1987. Produced by: Chet Kincaid/Nebraska Educational Television Network for the Nebraska Department of Education-ITV Services. A series about a 13-year-old boy from the Omaha tribe as he goes through the first summer of his manhood. This story develops in the year 1800, when the traditional Omaha culture was still intact and thriving. This series portrays a historically accurate and culturally sensitive presentation of Native American life and culture at a time when white and black men had traded, but not settled along the Missouri River.

1,000 Years of Muscogee (Creek) Art. Length: 28:00. 1982. Produced by: Gary Robinson/Creek Nation Communications. This program traces the development of Creek Indian art forms from the prehistoric period of the mound-builders to the present. Experts in the fields of Anthropology, History, and Art Criticism place Creek artifacts in their proper cultural and historical context.

On the Path to Self-Reliance. Length: 45:00. 1982. Produced by: Peter J. Barton Productions. James Billie, Chairman, of the Seminole Tribe exemplifies the goals of the people he serves-- to be proud, independent, and fully self-reliant. This documentary narrated by Chairman Billie provides an excellent overview of tribal history and current tribal economic development.

Oscar Howe: The Sioux Painter. Length: 29:00. 1973. Produced by: KUSD-TV. Oscar Howe, South Dakota's late Artist Laureate, preserves the Sioux culture by giving visual form to Sioux ideas.

People of the Macon Plateau. Length: 9:57. Produced by: Thomas Radford. This video, a short caption of the eastern United States tribes and their history, blends beautiful scenery, archival photos and modern day technologies to represent the contrast between the power of technology and the power of Mother Earth.

People of the First Light--A Series. 1979. Produced by: WGBY-TV. The series shows how Native American people in southern New England have maintained their cultural identity through various means such as dance, art, and a strong sense of family and community.

- Program 1: Indians in Southern New England (The Survivors)
- Program 2: The Wampanoags of Gay Head (Community Spirit and Island Life)
- Program 3: The Boston Indian Community (Change and Identity)
- Program 4: The Narragansetts (Tradition)
- Program 5: Indians of Connecticut (The Importance of Land)
- Program 6: The Indian Experience: Urban and Rural (Survival)
- Program 7: The Mashpee Wampanoags (Tribal Identity)

Pride, Purpose, and Promise: Paiutes of the Southwest. Length: 28:10. 1982. Produced by: KLVX-TV. The Paiutes of the Southwest are survivors. Like many Indian tribes, they have struggled against insurmountable odds--disease, loss of land, and economic deprivation. While the struggle continues, the Paiutes are learning that it is possible to restore pride, maintain cultural identity, and strive for self sufficiency through economic development.

Pueblo Peoples: "First Encounters". Length: 30:00. 1991. Produced by: KNME-TV. The program vividly captures the Pueblo peoples' reaction to the first Spanish invaders in 1539 and 1540. This program weaves historic accounts with contemporary Pueblo interpretations of events, while exploring the spiritual and cultural dimensions of the first confrontation with Europeans.

The Real People--A Series. 1976. Produced by: KSPS-TV. This is the first television series made by and about American Indians. The different programs choose highlights from the past and the important aspects of current life on and off the reservations. These programs are designed for a family audience and present a truly Indian point-of-view.

- Program 1: A Season of Grandmothers
- Program 2: Circle of Song--Part 1
- Program 3: Circle of Song--Part 2
- Program 4: Mainstream
- Program 5: Awakening
- Program 6: Spirit of the Wind
- Program 7: Buffalo, Blood, Salmon, and Roots
- Program 8: Legend of the Stick Game
- Program 9: Words of Life--People of Rivers

Red Road: Towards the Techno-Tribal. Length: 26:52. 1984. Produced by: KBDI-TV. This documentary presents and explores contemporary views of Native American philosophy, spirituality, and prophecy. Through an interesting combination of interviews with medicine people, elders, and spokespersons we learn how traditional values and ancient cosmology can play an important role in today's world.

Return of the Raven, The Edison Chiloquin Story. Length: 47:00. 1985. Produced by: Barry Hood Films. In 1954, in a policy which became known as "Klamath Termination," the Klamath Tribe of Oregon joined over a hundred tribes throughout the country in loss of federal recognition. The U. S. government terminated Federal supervision over the property of the Klamath Tribe without their consent. In 1961, the government made individual payments for the reservation land to tribal members. Edison Chiloquin refused payment of over a quarter-million dollars for his land and eventually became the first individual Native American to have his land returned by Congress. In 1980 President Carter signed the historic Chiloquin Act. In 1985, The Klamaths approached Congress to reverse termination.

Return of the Sacred Pole. Length: 30:00. 1989. Produced by: Michael Farrell, Nebraska Educational Television--Cultural Affairs Unit. "The Return of the Sacred Pole" tells the story of the Omaha tribe and its reclaiming of the Sacred Pole, a spirit-endowed artifact that has been held for the past 100 years by the Peabody Museum at Harvard University.

Strength of Life--Knokovtee Scott. Length: 27:00. 1984. Produced by: Scott Swearingen, University of Tulsa, Sheila Swearingen, and Gary Robinson, Creek Nation. In this production, Indian artist Knokovtee Scott describes his shellwork jewelry and shares with us his journey of rediscovery as he sought the authentic art of his Creek and Cherokee ancestors.

The Sun Dagger. Length: 29:00. 1983. Produced by: The Solstice Project. This program tells the story of perhaps the most exciting early Indian discovery in North America. In late June of 1977, Anna Sofaer, a Washington, D.C., artist, climbed to the top of a high butte in Chaco Canyon, New Mexico. She saw a dagger of light pierce an ancient spiral rock carving and was convinced that she had discovered something significant.

Tales of Wesakechak--A Series. 1984. Produced by: Marla Dufour, Storytellers Production. A thirteen part series of fifteen minute programs based on well known Canadian Cree legends. An oral storyteller and shadow puppets are used to dramatize these stories of Wesakechak. Wesakechak was the teacher of the first Indian people.

They Never Asked Our Fathers. Length: 58:00. 1982. Produced by: KYUK-TV, John McDonald & Alexie Isaac. Nunivaaq, the name means "Island." For at least 2,000 years it has been home of Yup'ik Eskimos, hunters and gatherers, seafarers and fishers. Unknown to them, other people were laying claim to that land, first the Russians and then the United States government. They Never Told Our Fathers interweaves historic photographs, documents, interviews with Eskimo elders and scenes of island life in the Berin Sea, one of the most remote and beautiful parts of Alaska, to demonstrate the negative impact of U.S. government policies on Nunivaag over the past fifty years.

Tomorrow's Yesterday. Length: 29:12. 1971. Produced by: KBYU-TV. This program shows how the Pueblo people adapt to the challenges of modern civilization while maintaining their identity and culture.

The Treaty of 1868 Series. 1987. Produced by: NETCHE. Who really owns the Black Hills of western South Dakota? The arguments are as intertwined as the dark pines for which the area is named. To the Lakota Sioux, it is sacred ground lost; to the U.S. government, it is land fairly claimed and settled. Examine the roots of this dispute in The Treaty of 1868, a two-part production. These half hour segments present facts and beliefs that have fueled over a century of debate.

The Trial of Standing Bear. 1988. Produced by: The Nebraska Education Television Network. In 1877, the United States government forcibly moved members of the Ponca Indian Nation from their ancestral home on the Niobrara River in northern Nebraska 500 miles south to the Indian Territory, in what is now Oklahoma. "The Trial of Standing Bear" tells the story of Ponca Chief Standing Bear, who was arrested by the U. S. Army after leading a small group of his people from Indian Territory back to their homeland in northern Nebraska in defiance of government orders. His plight was the basis for the landmark 1879 legal case which established for the first time that "an Indian is a person within the meaning of the law" and thus was recognized as having protection under the U. S. Constitution.

Walking with Grandfather--A Series. 1988. Produced by: Phil Lucas Productions, Inc. Stories have always been a special part of the way people communicate with and relate to each other. They also help people learn a great deal about themselves, the world around them, and the beliefs and values of their own and other cultures. The stories in the "Walking With Grandfather" series do all of the above.

Warriors. Length: 57:21. Deb Wallwork, Prairie Public Television. Since World War I, Native American Indians have served in the United States Armed Forces. During the Vietnam War, close to 90% of the 86,000 who enlisted volunteered, giving Native Americans the highest record of service per-capita of any ethnic group. Over half served in combat. Why were so many Native Americans willing to go fight in American's most controversial war? What is their view of Vietnam twenty years later?

We Are One--A Series. 1986. Teacher's Guide. Produced by: Chet Kincade/Nebraska Educational. A series about the life and culture of a Native American family in early 19th century Nebraska. There eight, 20-minute lessons are designed to bring to life the richness and complexity of Native American culture-- in particular, the Omaha culture.

White Man's Way. Length: 30:00. 1986. Produced by: Christine Lesiak/Nebraska Educational Television Network. Beginning in the late 1800's, an experiment that endeavored to transform the American Indian "from savagery into civilization" took place across the United States. In the heart of what was once Pawnee Indian country-- Genoa Nebraska--was built the U. S. Indian School, a government-supported military-style school for Indian children from more than 20 tribes. Here they were taught the White Man's language, traditions and lifestyles and were forbidden to practice their own.

Woonspe (Education and the Sioux). Length: 27:45. 1974. Produced by: South Dakota ETV. Woonspe is the Dakota word for "lesson." This film explores the problem of Native American education.

Native Voices Public Television Workshop. VCB Room 224, Montana State University, Bozeman, MT, 59717, (406) 994-6223. Program which gives Native American producers support to create documentaries relevant to Native American communities.

COURSE OUTLINES AND SYLLABI

These course outlines and syllabi provide suggestions for faculty who wish to integrate materials on Native Americans into core courses or to teach Native American studies courses.

STRATEGIES FOR THE CORE COURSE IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

Prepared by Dr. Melanie McCoy, Assistant Professor of Political Science

- I. The Historical Context of the American Revolution and the Writing of the U.S. Constitution. This introductory section provides an opportunity for the instructor to speak of the different peoples and cultures in North America prior to the American Revolution. As part of this discussion, the instructor can speak of the First Americans (Native American peoples) and their relationships with European colonials. Within this context, the instructor can discuss how European values and christianity influenced the way Europeans perceived Native Americans and how these European values and beliefs influenced colonial policies toward Native American peoples.

Coffer, William E. Phoenix: The Decline and Rebirth of the Indian People. New York: Van Nostrand Reinhold, 1979. How ideas of christianity and European values were used to justify colonial Indian policies.

- II. The Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution. This section can include a discussion of the influence of the ideas of various European political philosophers on the writing of these two documents (for example, John Locke, Montesquieu). The instructor can then include materials on how the ideas and values of Native Americans also influenced the writing of these documents.

Weatherford, Jack. Indian Givers, How the Indians of the Americas Transformed the World. New York: Fawcett Columbine, 1988, "Liberty, Anarchism and the Noble Savage," p. 117-131 and "The Founding Indian Fathers," p. 133-150.

Grinde, Donald A., Jr. The Iroquois and the Founding of the American Nation. San Francisco: Indian Historian Press, 1977.

Brandon, William. The Last Americans: The Indians in American Culture. New York: McGraw/Hill, 1974.

These three books delineate how the Native American concepts of personal liberty and freedom may have influenced European philosophers who, in turn, influenced the American Revolution and the writing of the U.S. Constitution (Sir Thomas More; Michel de Montaigne; Louis Armand de Lom d'Arc, Baron de Lahonton; and Thomas Paine). They also show the influence and impact of Native American peoples on American democratic institutions and the U.S. Constitution and the powerful role the Iroquois Confederacy may have played in the forming of the American system of government.

III. Federalism.

This section provides an opportunity for the instructor to use the relationship of various Native American peoples with local governments, the states and the U.S. government to show how a federal system of government works. I would suggest that the instructor tailor this material to the local governments, state and tribes that are located in the vicinity of their college or university. This material could be used as an example of how the federal system of government operates in a specific field of policy. Since most Anglo-Americans are unaware of the unique relationship of Native Americans to the various levels of government, this would provide an excellent opportunity to inform students of their unique status. This discussion might also provide an opportunity to lessen the bias of some non-Native American students who make statements such as "Indians are given everything by the government"; "Indians don't have to pay taxes"; "Indians don't have to obey the law," etc.

Pages 227-239 provide a good discussion of the special status under U.S. law of certain Indian groups---Pueblos of New Mexico, Alaska Natives, Oklahoma Indians, New York Indians, and the status of non-recognized tribes.

IV. Voting Rights.

The instructor can include information on the voting rights of Native Americans when discussing how specific minority groups were given the right to vote. The instructor might discuss how being given the right to vote does not result in political equality and use Native Americans as an example of how and why the right to vote has not resulted in influence in electoral politics or election of Native Americans to state and federal offices.

Source:

Pevar, Stephen L. The Rights of Indians and Tribes. New York: Bantam Books, 1983, p. 212-213.

V. The Presidency.

When discussing the relationship of the President to the other two branches of government, the instructor can use the landmark case, Worcester v. Georgia (1832) as a vehicle to discuss an important part of the relationship between the judicial and executive branches---the president's responsibility to enforce federal court decisions. This is the case that President Andrew Jackson refused to enforce. The U.S. Supreme Court (Chief Justice Marshall) had ruled against the State of Georgia stating that it had no authority over Cherokee lands. Jackson supposedly said "Well, John Marshall has made his decision, now let him enforce it." This refusal helped set the stage for the removal of tribes from the South to the Indian Territory and, of course, led to the infamous "Trail of Tears."

VI. Political Interest Groups and Social Movements.

When discussing tactics used by political interest groups to press their claims on the government, the instructor can use Native American groups as examples of how to successfully use the federal courts to press claims on the government when tactics such as electoral politics, lobbying, etc., are not effective.

Price, Monroe E. Law and the American Indian: Readings, Notes and Cases. Indianapolis: Bobbs/Merrill, 1973.

The instructor can also use the American Indian Movement (AIM) as an example of a social movement and explain how this movement tried to change dominant social institutions and the perceptions of Euro-Americans of Native Americans.

VII. Equal Rights and Liberties.

When discussing religious freedom guarantees of the first amendment to the U.S. Constitution, include materials on Native American religious freedom. In almost every survey class some student will ask why Native Americans are given special treatment or privileges under the first amendment or why some Native Americans are allowed to use drugs in religious ceremonies while non-Indians are not.

VIII. Domestic Policy.

The instructor can include material in this section of the course on U.S. Indian policies. I would suggest trying to pick one which is especially applicable to the location of your college or university. If your region is interested in Indian gaming, or religious freedom, or closing off lands to development, or water rights, fishing rights, etc., you can choose that specific policy to emphasize.

IX. U.S. Political Ideology (an interrelated, consistent set of ideas concerning economic order, social goals, and moral and social values).

As part of this discussion, the instructor can discuss how certain U.S. values (such as manifest destiny, messianic complex) influence past and present U.S. policies toward Native Americans.

The instructor could discuss how many U.S. values, which underlie its political ideology, are shared with Native Americans (personal liberty, freedom, participatory government). This would also be an appropriate place in the course to discuss contributions Native Americans have made to the U.S. culture and its value system. Finally, the instructor might use a pamphlet such as "What are America's Social Values?", Chapter 2 of Greenhaven Press, Inc.'s American Values: Opposing Viewpoints, 1989 (ISBN 0-89908-956-9).

This pamphlet contains a viewpoint entitled "America Can Learn from Indian Values," by Ed McGaa, p. 104-110.

Textbooks: Two political science survey textbooks have been mentioned to me as attempting to integrate Native Americans and other political minorities into the text (as opposed to most survey texts which tack on a chapter as an afterthought giving 2-3 pages to each minority group). I have not had the opportunity to use either of these texts; consequently, I am not recommending them at this point. I am always on the lookout for texts which treat cultural diversity in an integrated manner. Please let me know if you are aware of any textbooks which the Association might add to this brief list.

Lively, lively, we are lots of people (Maidu Song)
Our students at the University of California at Berkeley may come from diverse cultural backgrounds. But as the drought, earthquakes, and recent devastating East Bay fire storm poignantly remind us, like the region's first peoples, we share a relationship to the bountiful and fragile land. By grounding a writing course in the literatures of the indigenous peoples of California, we explore the intersecting histories whose legacies affect all of us.

The oral and written testimonies of California's first inhabitants elicit important questions about relations between authority and authorship, classroom and community. Although it would be misguided to attempt to replicate tribal traditions in our classrooms, we pattern our approach to writing on Native American world views. In small group and plenary discussions, we allow silence to enter the classroom and encourage students to feel comfortable not knowing all the answers. Students talk over ideas before writing and reflect on what happens in translations from oral performance to written texts. Collaborative projects enable writers to better understand and articulate important dynamics of literatures of indigenous peoples, such as the politics of "as told to" life histories, relationships between oral and written speech, and the importance of place in shaping identity.

Bay Area Native American storytellers, community workers, veterans, and poets visit the class to share their experiences and perspectives. Betty Cooper (Blackfeet) speaks of her work in drug and alcoholic recovery programs. Jose Riviera provides Native American perspectives on Missions in California. Authors Preston Arrow-weed (Kwiltcyn) and Malcolm Margolin read and comment on their work. Each member of the class attends at least one local Native American event, such as a pow wow, a sweat, a lecture exhibit at American Indian Contemporary Arts, or the Coastal Miwok acorn festival at Point Reyes. Together, we visit and critique permanent displays at Berkeley's Museum of Anthropology and arrange for regional exhibits that correspond to the areas we study.

By regularly publishing and sharing student responses to these events and speakers, the class establishes itself as an interpretative community. Four major writing projects structure the course: 1) "A Place That Counts;" 2) Collaborative Life Histories; 3) Team Journals and related essays; and 4) "I-Search" Projects.

Images, Landscapes, and Testimonies. In the first days of class, students identify their images of Native Americans and the sources for those images. We contrast the media promulgated, commodified images of Indians of the Plains and the Southwest with traditional and contemporary testimonies of the Maidu, Pomo, Miwok, Paiute, Yurok, Hupa and others. After an overview of geographical, linguistic, and material cultures, we examine regional differences in storytelling practices, creation accounts and coyote tales. We hold one class outdoors with UC student Peg Mathewson, who demonstrates basket weaving, making acorn mush, and flint knapping.

The story "Coyote Steals Fire" takes on a different resonance when lifted from the pages of an anthology to watching someone start a fire in a small basket. To reflect on the ways that geography shapes identity, students draw on sensual memories to write a descriptive piece on "a place that counts" to them. To give these pieces an historical dimension, we read articles that analyze the palimpsest of narratives associated with a single site. Bev Ortiz's "Mount Diablo as Myth and Reality" unearths the cultural struggles implicit in the name of a local landmark. Jack Norton's "Traversing the Bridges of Our Lives" raises disturbing questions upon his return to the natural bridge that was the site of a massacre of 153 Wintun men, women and children. Darryl Babe Wilson's "Pit River Country Today" offers an evocative response to Jaime DeAngelo's "Indian in Overalls: Pit River Country in the 1920s."

Our study of place in relation to contemporary Native Americans explores false romantic images of the "Noble Savage" expiring in the wilderness. Today California hosts more than 250,000 Native Americans, the largest Indian population of any state, but fewer than twelve percent are native Californians. We read boarding school accounts by Pomo women, review the Bureau of Indian Affairs Relocation Program of the 1950s, and study works by such migrating Indian poets and writers in California as Mary Tall Mountain (Koyukon Athabascan), Gerald Vizenor (Anishnabe), Paula Gunn Allen (Laguna Pueblo) and Janice Gould (Maidu). These writers expose intimate, yet intricate relations between land and Native American identities.

Collaborative Life Histories. This project fosters an awareness of social and historical contingencies that shape literature. Two writers work together to present a short life history of one "as told to" the other, acknowledging the perspective and biases of the person the history is "told to." We publish the life histories by the fourth week, so the students work together to present themselves to the community of individuals with whom they're going to be reading, talking, and writing for the rest of the term.

First, the writers interview one another. Although they devise their own questions, we urge them to consider how gender, family structure, geographical settings, and community values and beliefs condition how they talk and think. Next, they work in pairs to produce a one- to two-page life history, say, of Jean, as told to Lauren, taking into account Lauren's perspective.

Together, they grapple with questions of form, pronoun choice, voice, and structure to negotiate a brief articulation of their composite identities. Some choose to write a dialogue, some write one paragraph from one writer's perspective and one from the other's, a few write poetry. Finally, students write anonymous reflections on the process, which we publish with the life histories.

We come back to these reflections throughout the course. The frustrations students voice in the process of writing collaborative life histories are just as valuable as the satisfactions they gain. The tensions and surprises they record in negotiating a personal exchange between self and "other" prepare them to question the objective stance of anthropological accounts of California Indians even though they might understand the motives that propelled that desire for objectivity. The project also helps them to understand the dynamics that inform Buckley's article on Karl Kroeber's negotiations with Yurok informer Robert Spott, "Suffering in The Cultural Construction of Others," or the life story of Delfina Cuero as told to Florence Shipeck.

Team Journals. Housed in the library, team journals are composed by five writers with pseudonyms. Each week, students write one entry that has two parts: 1) exploring a question about the reading and 2) responding to entries by other students. Jean Graybeal suggests that team journals provide a forum for "dissent, deep confusion, self awareness and self criticism . . . and community building." We might add that anonymous team journals allow students to voice crosscultural and gender differences, without necessarily making themselves representatives of a particular group, and to broach subjects too painful or too delicate to discuss in person.

Because many students come to the course with a limited understanding of California native history, they respond with shock, anger, denial, guilt and shame to the reality that within 150 years of contact, 96% of native California peoples died of disease, malnutrition, displacement or murder. The team journals offer a platform to air painful responses. Some students articulate personal revelations: "I felt cheated out of knowing the facts. The fur traders, the trappers, the gold miners, the settlers. I always thought they were the great heroes." Others relate family experiences: "This genocide is not so far from my family; I'm Jewish, and we lost many members in the Holocaust." Or "Our family takes vacations and often camps in California. These places will never be the same for me again." In order for team journals to flourish, they must be integrated with the rest of the course. We sometimes begin class discussion by reading excerpts from that week's entries. We require all class members to respond to voices from the team journal in a midterm essay, enabling them to observe and comment on the dynamics of their journal conversations.

Alternative Accounts of California History: Using the California Missions to Model the I-Search/Research Project. Many students are familiar with the Spanish missions in California. Yet most do not realize that under Spain's colonial rule (1769-1834), nearly 90,000 people were reduced to slave-like conditions in the twenty-one Alta California missions. Spending several weeks on this period accomplishes two objectives. First, native resources supplement colonial accounts of this era. Second, our study of the California mission period provides a model for students' research projects.

The handful of native accounts of Spanish mission life offer viewpoints contesting a romanticized colonial California. Costanoan Lorenzo Asisara's 1887 reminiscences recount enforced slavery, the demise of the local Indian population and the assassination of a Santa Cruz padre. The more contemporary Autobiography of Delfina Cuero, A Diegueno Woman, as told to Florence Shipek, records her family's displacement by Spanish, then later European and Chinese, settlers in the San Diego border area.

During a live performance of his play, A Time of Decay, Preston Arrow-weed sings the creation lightning song together with young dancers from the Kwitcyn reservation. Arrow-weed's play reveals his people's relation to the natural and spirit worlds and reconstructs their 1780 encounter with the Spanish along the banks of the Gila and Colorado Rivers.

Students then research and articulate their personal and cultural histories in relation to an aspect of California Indian history or literature. Modeled on Ken Macrorie's I-Search paper, this project encourages students to acknowledge the interrelationship between the objective and subjective modes of inquiry. Students are expected to interview live sources and consequently critique the limitations of standard sources. Their essays weave in their family histories and personal responses.

Whether of native heritage or not, they affirm yet recontextualize their positions as researchers and writers. After interviewing his grandfather to obtain information on the Sierra Miwok in Calaveras County at the turn of the century, John Garamendi wrote, "All my life I have climbed over the rocks and bluffs near Chili Gulch in Calaveras County. The gaping wounds of the hydraulic mines and old Indian grinding holes became a playground and a source of entertainment.

It never occurred to me that real people built my playgrounds or that the Gold Rush of 1849 trampled the Indians and delivered them into the soil which I played on as a child." Through interviews, David Jackson (Quechan) came to understand the tale of his people's beginnings, a tale which structures their funeral ceremony. His aunt was anxious to participate and "was proud at least one of her nephews was interested in learning the ways of the Quechans." He writes, "This was the most accurate account of the funeral ceremony I could put together and hopefully I have respectfully honored the Quechans with these words.

Plains Indian Culture Syllabi

Prepared by Dr. Donna Rosh, Moorhead State University

Course Description

This course focuses on past and present cultures of American Plains Indians. Individual plains tribal traditions are compared and contrasted. Introductory materials in archaeology, the culture area concept, ecology, and the ethnohistorical approach are included. The interdependence of techno-environment, socio-political organization and ideology is stressed, with emphasis on culture change. Present day adaptations to reservation and urban life are examined.

American Indian Belief Systems Syllabi

Prepared by Dr. Donna Rosh, Moorhead State University

Course Description

This course introduces students to the sacred ways of the Indians of North America through oral tradition, interviews, speeches, songs, and contemporary literature. The meanings, roles, and functions of traditional belief systems will be discussed. By letting the People speak for themselves, we may come to a better understanding of the strength, beauty, and vitality of their beliefs.

Indian Education Syllabi

Prepared by Dr. Donna Rosh, Moorhead State University

Course Description

This course is an overview of the nature, purpose, history, philosophy, and programs of both traditional and contemporary American Indian Education. It is designed especially, but not exclusively, to assist students who plan to work in some area of education where an understanding and appreciation of Indian culture is essential. Classroom methods and curriculum materials designed for Indian students as well as those designed for introducing non-Indian students to Indian culture will be discussed.
